JUDGMENT.—These are two appeals by Nosha Mia and Mohesh Chandra Chaudhury who were convicted of forgery and abetment of forgery respectively, and sentenced, Nosha Mia to six months' rigorous imprisonment, and Mohesh Chandra Chaudhury to one year's rigorous imprisonment. The case is a somewhat peculiar one. It appears that Nosha Mia was proposing to sell some property to another person of the same name. A Kobala was written out by Nosha Mia—the appellant—on a stamp paper of Rs. 5. The Kobala was to have been executed sometime in May 1914 and bore the date 23rd May written by the appellant Nosha Mia. The sale having fallen through, it became necessary to apply to the Collector for a refund of the stamp duty. The appellant Nosha Mia took advice with regard to this and he was told that no refund would be made after two months. The other appellant Mohesh Chandra Chaudhury, who is a Pleader's clerk of some three years' standing, gave him this advice, and also told him that he might alter the date in the document from 23rd May to 23rd September, which would bring the application for the refund within the two months. This was quite unnecessary on their part inasmuch as the period was not two months but six months. The application for the refund would, therefore, have been within six months from the date 23rd May, inserted in the document. Upon this they were charged with forgery and abetment of forgery and found guilty as above stated.

The question then arises what was the offence committed. There was undoubtedly a dishonest and fraudulent intention, for the appellants clearly intended to cheat the Government, being unaware that they could, in fact, obtain their object honestly. At the same time it may be argued with some show of reason that what they did does not fall within the definition of forgery contained in section 464, Indian Penal Code. So far as the document was an unexecuted Kobala, the appellant Nosha Mia had authority to alter it as it was his own document. But for the purposes of this case, the document must be regarded rather as an used or spoilt stamp paper, on which the appellants were applying for a refund. It is, however, unnecessary to decide this point, as they were clearly guilty of fabricating, and abetting the fabrication of, false evidence (sections 192, 193, Indian Penal Code). As was done in the case of Empress v. Mir Ekrar Ali (1), we convict the appellants under section 193 and sections 193 109 respectively. The term of imprisonment already undergone by Nosha Mia is, in our opinion, sufficient. We accordingly reduce the sentence in his case to the period of imprisonment already undergone, and direct that he be released.

In the case of Mohesh Chandra Chaudhury we think that the period of imprisonment which he has already undergone (i.e., nearly two months) is sufficient imprisonment, and we accordingly reduce the term of imprisonment in his case to that period, but we sentence him in addition to a fine of Rs. 50, and, in default, one month's rigorous imprisonment.

Appeals dismissed; Sentences reduced.

There is no provision of law that a Judge, who records the evidence of a witness in cases to which Order XVIII, rule 5, of the Civil Procedure Code applies, shall append a note to the effect that the evidence of the witness when completed has been duly read out to him. In every such case it should be presumed under section 80 of the Evidence Act that the statement was duly taken. [p. 873, col. 1.]

Where, therefore, there is no evidence to show that the deposition of a witness in a civil suit was not read over to him by the Judge, it must be presumed under section 80 of the Evidence Act that the Judge complied with the provisions of Order XVIII, rule 5 of the Civil Procedure Code. [p. 873, col. 1.]

A locus penitentiae should not be allowed to an accused person who has made a false statement in Court and who, when subsequently tried for perjury, adheres to his former statement, admits it was correctly recorded and asserts that it is true. [p. 873, col. 1.]

Appeal from the order of the Magistrate, 1st Class, Gurdaspur, dated the 30th April 1917.

Mr. Mul Chand, R. S., Public Prosecutor, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Dalrymple and Hari Lal Bahl, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The respondent in this case, Jagat Ram, and the respondent in Criminal Appeal No. 864 of 1917, Mahant Kaul Das, were tried before Khan Faiz Mohammad Khan, Extra Assistant Commissioner, Magistrate of the 1st Class, upon charges under section 193, Indian Penal Code, of having given false evidence in a judicial proceeding before the Subordinate Judge of Gurdaspur in the case of Jagat Ram v. Mangal Das. The alleged false statements made by the two respondents, respectively, as recorded by the Subordinate Judge, were duly set forth in the charges against them, and they both stated, when examined by the Magistrate who tried these cases, that the statements as recorded by the Subordinate Judge were true. The Magistrate at the conclusion of the trials (for each respondent was tried separately) found that in point of fact the said statements were false to the knowledge of the respondents, and that they had both deliberately and dishonestly perjured themselves in the Court of the Subordinate Judge. In view, however, of the decision of a single Judge of this Court reported as Kartar Singh v. Emperor (1), he held that it was impossible to convict the respondents, inasmuch as the record of the deposition of each of them in the Subordinate Judge's Court did not have appended to it "the usual note" that the depositions had been read over to the respondents and admitted by them to be correct. He felt compelled, therefore, to acquit them on the technical ground set forth in the judgment of this Court above referred to, that there can be no conviction based on "a false statement which is not made and recorded with all formalities in the manner required by law."

AMBALAM IBRAHI v. EMPEROR.

From this order of acquittal the Local Government has preferred an appeal under section 417, Criminal Procedure Code, and we have heard Mr. Mul Chand on behalf of the Crown and Mr. Dalrymple on behalf of the respondents. In our opinion the Magistrate was in error in holding that in the absence of "a definite note" on the Subordinate Judge's record, it was impossible for him to say that the statements were in fact read over to the accused persons when they gave evidence as witnesses in the civil suit. There is no provision of law that a Judge who records the evidence of a witness in cases to which Order XVIII, rule 5, of the Civil Procedure Code applies, shall append a note to the effect that the evidence of the witness, when completed, has been duly read out to him. As a matter of practice, and as a very wholesome rule, such notes are frequently appended, but it is not obligatory on the Courts in civil cases to make a note to that effect. Accordingly in every such case it should be presumed under section 80 of the Indian Evidence Act that the statement was duly taken, or, in other words, was taken in accordance with the provisions of section 182 of the Civil Procedure Code. This is, of course, merely a presumption and can be rebutted by evidence that the deposition in question was not duly taken, but in the absence of such evidence the Court is bound to presume that the provisions of the law as to the reading over of the evidence in the presence of the Judge and of the witness were duly complied with. Upon this point we must, with every respect, differ from the learned Judge who decided the authority relied upon by the Magistrate.

In the present case there is no evidence that the depositions were not read over to the witnesses, and the Magistrate ought, therefore, to have assumed that the Subordinate Judge complied with the provisions of Order XVIII, rule 5, of the Civil Procedure Code. Upon these facts it is unnecessary for us to discuss the question whether a locus penitentiæ should be allowed to a person who has made a false statement in Court and the Court has omitted to comply with the provisions of Order XVIII, rule 5, of the Code. But whether it is to be allowed or not, we cannot but think that such indulgence is excessive in a case where the person in question, when subsequently tried for perjury, adheres to his former statement, admits it was correctly recorded and asserts that it is true.

For the reasons given we accept the appeal and setting aside the order of acquittal we direct the Magistrate to proceed to judgment in accordance with law.

Appeal accepted.

The application for copy was made to the officer as a Magistrate (a Criminal Court) by an accused convicted by him and the Board's Standing Order has absolutely no relevancy to such an application. Cantonment Code, s. 231 (2)—“Absence,” meaning of—Failure to appoint agent during absence of nine days from Cantonment—Offence.

In construing the word “absence” as used in section 231 (2) of the Cantonment Code, the word should receive a larger or more restricted meaning according to what the Court believes to be the intention of the Legislature in framing the particular provision in which the word is used. [p. 874, col. 2.]

An absence of nine days from a Cantonment is such absence as is contemplated by section 231 (2) of the Code and would render the delinquent liable to conviction and punishment under the section. [p. 875, col. 1.]

Application for revision of an order passed by the Cantonment Magistrate, Hyderabad.

Mr. F. J. De Verteuil, for the Applicant.

Mr. T. G. Elphinston, Acting Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT. This is an application for revision of an order of the Cantonment Magistrate, Hyderabad, convicting the applicant under section 231 (2) of the Cantonment Code for failing to appoint an agent during a period when he was absent from the cantonment in which he owned a bungalow.

The applicant admitted that he did remain absent for nine days at Karachi. He was convicted on that plea and sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 20 or in default to suffer one week's simple imprisonment.

Mr. De Verteuil for the applicant states that the absence of nine days is too short a period to constitute absence within the meaning of section 231 (2) of the Cantonment Code. But the section does not specify any period of absence and, we think, the same rule must be applied to the construction of the word “absence” as was applied in the case of Mahomed Shujli v. Laldin Abdula (1) to the word “residence”. It is there said that the word may receive a larger or more restricted meaning according to what the Court believes the intention of the Legislature had been in framing the particular provision in which the word was used. The intention of the Legislature in this case was, no doubt, that the owner when absent should be represented by an agent to receive notices and otherwise to assist the Cantonment Authority in the performance of the sanitary and municipal duties imposed upon it by the rules made under the Cantonment Act. If the absence is of such a period as to cause inconvenience to the Cantonment Authority in performance of its duties, the accused must be considered to have been absent within the meaning of section 231 of the Cantonment Code. In this view we think the absence of nine days at Karachi was such absence as was contemplated by section 231 (2) of the Cantonment Code.

We, therefore, reject this application.

When the time for auction-sale of the property arrived, notice was issued to the accused to produce the property. They evaded service of the notice on several occasions and the property was not produced:

Held, (1) that the accused could not be convicted of criminal breach of trust under section 406 of the Penal Code inasmuch as the property had not been misappropriated or converted to the use of the accused, nor had it been used or disposed of in any manner contrary to the terms of the trust.

JUDGMENT.—The applicant in this case has been convicted under section 406 of the Indian Penal Code. What happened was this. Certain moveable property was attached in execution of a decree. The officer of the Court who made the attachment placed the property in charge of the accused. When the time for auction-sale of the property arrived, notice was issued to the accused to produce the property. They evaded service of the notice on several occasions and the property was not produced. For this they have been held to be guilty of criminal breach of trust. The accused were no doubt entrusted with the attached property, but they would not be guilty of criminal breach of trust unless they dishonestly misappropriated or converted the property to their own use or dishonestly used or disposed of it in violation of any direction of law describing the mode in which the trust which they undertook was to be discharged. In the present case the property was not misappropriated or converted to the use of the accused, nor was it used or disposed of in any manner contrary to the terms of the trust. Therefore, they could not be convicted under section 406. They were no doubt guilty of contempt of Court and their offence amounted, if at all, to one under section 172 of the Indian Penal Code. For this they could only be sentenced to one month's simple imprisonment. They have already undergone rigorous imprisonment for nearly three weeks. The result is that I set aside the conviction, acquit the accused of the offence under section 406 and convict them under section 172 of the Indian Penal Code. The imprisonment already undergone is more than sufficient for their conviction under this section. The sentence of fine is remitted and the accused need not surrender to their bail. The fine, if paid, must be refunded.

Conviction altered.

—Munsif's Court, whether subordinate to District Judge for purposes of s. 195—Appeal to District Judge, whether competent—Procedure—Punjab Courts Act (III of 1914), s. 39 (4).

Section 195 (7) (a) of the Criminal Procedure Code lays down that where appeals lie to more Courts than one, the Appellate Court of inferior jurisdiction is the Court to which the lower Court is deemed to be subordinate for the purposes of the section.

Where, therefore, on a Munsif's refusal to sanction a prosecution, an appeal was preferred to the District Judge:

Held, that as under section 39 (4) of the Punjab Courts Act and Chief Court Notification No. 4424G dated 20th July 1914, certain appeals from the Munsif's decrees lay to the Subordinate Judge, the District Judge had no jurisdiction to hear the appeal which ought to have been preferred to the Subordinate Judge.

Revision from the order of the Sessions Judge, Hoshiarpur and Kangra, dated the 22nd December 1917.

Mr. Fakir Chand, for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT.—The Munsif having refused sanction to prosecute, Nand Ram applied to the District Judge who granted leave to prosecute Labhu Ram and Salig Ram. Labhu Ram applies to this Court for revision.

Under section 39 (4) of the Punjab Courts Act, and Chief Court Notification No. 4424G., dated the 20th July 1914, certain appeals from Munsifs' decrees lie to the 1st Class Subordinate Judge.

Section 195 (7) (a), Criminal Procedure Code, lays down that where appeals lie to more than one Court, the Appellate Court of inferior jurisdiction is the Court to which the lower Court is deemed to be subordinate for purposes of the section. So the District Judge had no jurisdiction; Nand Ram should have appealed to the 1st Class Subordinate Judge. If any authority be needed, reference may be made to *Bure Khan v. Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 186—Restitution of conjugal rights, decree for—Warrant for execution, legality of—Obstruction to warrant—Offence.

A decree in a contested suit for restitution of conjugal rights passed on 3rd March 1917 directed the wife to return to her husband within 3 months of its date. The wife not having obeyed the decree, on the 15th September 1917 a warrant was issued against her without giving her any previous notice:

Held, that the wife was not entitled to a notice before the warrant was issued and that obstruction to the execution of the warrant was an offence punishable under section 186 of the Penal Code. [p. 877, cols 1 & 2.]

FACTS.—Petitioners, accused, obstructed a public servant, Naib-Nazir of a Court, who went to execute a decree by arresting one Ayesha Khatan, a Muhammadan woman, for restitution of conjugal rights. Hence they were convicted and sentenced, one set convicted under sections 353 and 323 and the other set under sections 186, 226 and 323, Indian Penal Code.

Babu Chandra Sekhar Sen, for the Petitioner.—Order XXI, rules 22 of the Civil Procedure Code, does not contemplate arrest but only detention. Judgment-debtor Ayesha Khatan had no opportunity of obeying the order of the Court, i.e., the decree passed by the Civil Court. There is nothing in the record to show that the accused refused to obey the order of the Court.

[SHAMSUL HUDA, J.—The time for obeying the Court's decree is within 3 months and if you did not comply with the Court's order within that time the warrant was all right.]

The question is whether the arrest was legal or not, i.e., whether the Court could, under the circumstances, issue such a warrant. Before executing the decree a notice ought to have been given to the judgment-debtor about its execution, but in this case nothing was done i.e., notice was not issued to give her time to comply with the Court's order. Hence where is the justification of the Court's order? The judgment debtor being an illiterate pardanashin lady, the warrant ought to have been explained to her.

In an unreported case of this Court Criminal Revision Case No. 175 of 1918, the facts were exactly the same as in this case and Rule was issued by their Lordships. As the warrant was not executed under Order XXI, rule 32, the warrant was illegal and obstruction against the execution of an illegal warrant was no obstruction which is punishable under the law. As soon as the time for execution viz., 3 months expired, if the decree-holder came to the Court and asked for a warrant against the judgment-debtor, the Court should first issue notice on the judgment-debtor directing her to obey the Court's decree and if she refused then the Court would be justified in issuing the warrant.

[SHAMSUL HUDA, J.—If the warrant is within one year no notice is necessary. Had it been more than one year then notice would have been necessary.]

Mr. Orr, Deputy Legal Remembrancer, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.

RICHARDSON, J.—The petitioners before us have been convicted and sentenced to various terms of imprisonment, and one of them has also been fined, under sections 186, 323 and 353, Indian Penal Code, or one or more of these sections. This Rule was issued on the District Magistrate to show cause why the convictions and sentences should not be set aside on the ground that the warrant was illegal, in that it was not shown that Ayesha Khatun had an opportunity of obeying the decree and wilfully failed to obey it. The only point, therefore, which has been argued before us is whether Ayesha Khatun, the lady mentioned in the Rule, had an opportunity or a sufficient opportunity to obey the decree. The decree was a decree obtained against her by her husband for restitution of conjugal rights. It was made on the 3rd March 1917. The warrant in question was not issued till the 15th September 1917. The decree directed that the lady should return to her husband within three months of its date. It is not suggested that the lady had no knowledge of the terms of the decree. The suit was a contested suit and no such suggestion could be successfully made in the circumstances. In my opinion, on the facts stated, there is no ground for saying that the lady had no sufficient opportunity to obey the decree. The learned Pleader who appears for the petitioners contended that the lady was entitled to notice before the warrant was issued. That proposition, however, cannot be supported in view of the decision of this Court in the case of Durga Das Nandi v. Dewaraj Agarwala (1).

In my opinion, the Rule must be discharged. Those of the petitioners who were released on bail must surrender to their bail and undergo the remainder of their sentences.

SHAMSUL HUDA, J.—I agree.

Under section 145, the Court must record a finding as to which party was in possession at the date of its preliminary order. [p. 878, col. 2.]

Petitioners claimed the sole right to lay their warps in a certain street in a village and respondents claimed a joint right with the petitioners. The Court, holding that joint user of both parties was established, forbade petitioners from interfering with the joint enjoyment of the street by the respondents:

Held, (1) that it was not competent to the Court to find joint possession under sections 145 and 146, Criminal Procedure Code; [p. 878, col. 2.]

(2) that the right to lay warps was not a right to the possession of land but a right to the use of it and the Court should have dealt with the matter under section 147, Criminal Procedure Code; [p. 878, col. 2.]

(3) that the Court could find that by custom each party was entitled to use a particular part of the street, provided the right alleged by either side was sustainable under the proviso to the section. [p. 879, col. 1.]

Petition, under section 20 of the Letters Patent, praying the High Court to revise the order of the Joint 1st Class Magistrate of Tinnevely, dated the 8th August 1917, in Miscellaneous Case No. 16 of 1917.

This case coming on for hearing, upon perusing the petition and the order of the lower Court and the record in the case and upon hearing the arguments of Mr. M. D. Devadoss, for the Petitioners, and of Messrs. K. R. Guruswami Aiyar and A. Subramania Aiyar, for Respondents Nos. 2 and 5, and the 1st respondent having died, the Court made the following ORDER.—The dispute between the parties in this case is regarding the rights of respondents to lay their warps in a certain street in their village, petitioners claiming the exclusive right to do so and respondents alleging that they are entitled also. The lower Court, holding what it refers to as joint user established, has, under section 140 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, forbidden petitioners to interfere with the joint enjoyment of the street by respondents in the manner in question.

Petitioners have objected to this order on the ground that it was passed after admissible evidence, oral and documentary, had been excluded. But the view I take involves consideration only of two more substantial objections that (1) sections 145 and 146 authorise no recognition of joint possession,

(2) the lower Court did not decide, as the former section directs, which party was in possession on 23rd June 1917, the date of the preliminary order. The first of these objections is justified by the description in the sections of the different orders which can be passed and by reference to authority, the latest case being Veerabhadra Pillai v. Shunmugam Pillai (1); see also Dharani Kanta Lahiry Chowdhury v. Girija Kanta Lahiry Chowdhury (2) and Makhan Lal Roy v. Barada Kanta Roy (3). The second is based on the contention which is consistent apparently (for the lower Court has not dealt with the point) with petitioners' petition of 3rd February 1917 and respondents' evidence that the latter were prevented from laying warps on 1st February 1917 and did not do so subsequently and, therefore, if possession was in question, had none either at the date of the preliminary order or within the two months preceding it referred to in the proviso to section 145. If this contention had been established it would have entitled petitioners to succeed, if an order under section 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure had been appropriate, and such an order passed in disregard of this fact cannot be sustained. That the first of these objections to the lower Court's order is available is, however, entailed by the fact that it made a fundamental mistake in attempting to apply section 145 at all. On that account its order must be set aside.

The right to lay warps in a street is clearly, as respondents argue here and as petitioners contended in their review petition to the lower Court of September 1917, not a right to possession of land but a right to the use of it such as section 147 of the Code of Criminal Procedure deals with, and the lower Court should have proceeded under that section. If it had done so, it would have avoided not only the legally inadmissible recognition of joint possession, but also the use of terms "joint user", and "joint enjoyment" in its judgment and final order, to which it is impossible to attach any definite significance. For it cannot be said that A who lays his

The lower Court may now find, and it will be admissible for it to consider before passing an order, that this user is regulated by custom or otherwise, if only to the extent that priority of occupation on any particular day is respected and if such regulation is established, it may do well to frame its order accordingly. It will, in any case, have to consider whether the right alleged by either side is sustainable with reference to the period prescribed in the proviso to the section. If it is not, no order recognising that side's user can be passed.

The lower Court's order is set aside and the petition is remanded to it for re-hearing in the light of the foregoing, after it has passed a preliminary order under section 147. At the enquiry to be held it will take evidence de novo, including that alleged to have been excluded improperly, if it is otherwise admissible. Costs to date here and before the lower Court will be costs in the case and will be provided for in the final order passed. Fee on each side in this Court is Rs. 25.

CRIMINAL REVISION No. 55 OF 1916.

MADAN GOPAL DEOKARAN—

THE SECRETARY, MUNICIPAL COMMITTEE, NAGPUR—NON-APPLICANT.
C. P. Municipal Act (XVI of 1903), ss. 67

(1) (2), 122, 139—Encroachment, old, prosecution in respect of, legality of—Remedy.

What is made criminally punishable under section 122 of the C. P. Municipal Act is the act of making an encroachment. The section cannot reasonably be construed as making punishable an existing encroachment not made by the accused person. [p. 880, col. 1.]

In the case of an encroachment not made by the accused, sub-section (2) of section 67 of the Act provides full means of redress which can be enforced by the penal provisions of section 139. [p. 880, col. 2.]

The word 'such' in sub-section (2) of section 67 of the Act refers back to the words "structure encroaching on any street" in sub-section (1), and not only to new encroachments as is clear from the proviso in which encroachments of very old standing are referred to. [p. 880, col. 2.]

Revision of the judgment, finding and sentence passed by the Magistrate, 1st Class, in Criminal Case No. 675 of 1915, dated the 21st March 1916.

Mr. W. H. Dhabe, for the Applicant.

Mr. A. C. Roy, for the Non-Applicant.

JUDGMENT.—The applicant was prosecuted by the Nagpur Municipality under section 122 of the Municipalities Act for encroaching on a public street. According to the learned Magistrate who tried the case summarily there is a pacca chabutra of dressed stones, which itself constitutes an encroachment, and beyond the chabutra is a line of loosely hacked stones (which I am told, correctly or not I cannot say, can be used as steps) projecting even further into the street; but the prosecution is in respect of the line of stones only. It is not denied by the learned Pleader for the applicant that the stones constituted a structure within the meaning of section 67 (1) of the Municipalities Act. The case for the prosecution was that the applicant himself had placed this structure in the street, but among other contentions the accused alleged that the stones have been where they are for a long time, from before the date on which he inherited the house. The City Magistrate in the course of a very reasonable and careful judgment says:—

"The fact is that no one knows exactly when these stones were added, because they do not form a conspicuous addition to the building. The main argument for the defence is that even if the land is

MADAN GOPAL DEOKARAN V. SECRETARY, MUNICIPAL COMMITTEE, NAGPUR.

Municipal, Madan Gopal, the present accused, cannot be prosecuted for the encroachment because he inherited the house as it stands at present. The wording of section 122, Municipal Act, is 'whoever encroaches', and it is argued that only the person who originally made the encroachment can be prosecuted. This is of importance because in view of the conflict of the evidence I cannot hold that the prosecution have proved that it was Madan Gopal who actually put the stones there. It seems to me clear that the word 'encroach' includes the continuing of an encroachment as well as the making of it and that Madan Gopal can be prosecuted even though it was not he who put the stones there." The prosecution referred to by the Magistrate, of course, refers to the prosecution under section 122 of the Act.

That part of section 122 which relates to obstructions or encroachments upon streets made in connection with a house without the written permission of the Committee, must be read with section 67 (1), which enacts that "No person shall, without the written permission of the Committee, place in front of any building any structure.....encroaching on any street."

The words "place in front of any building" in section 67, and the word 'encroachment' in section 122 prima facie mean "commits an act of encroachment": a man cannot be held liable for an act or omission unless such act or omission is definitely declared to be an offence. What is made criminally punishable under section 122 is the act of making an encroachment; the section cannot reasonably be construed as making punishable the omission to remove an existing encroachment not made by the accused person. The learned District Magistrate who characterises the view that the word 'encroach' applies only to the original intention as a "ridiculous proposition," says, "any other view (than his own) would reduce this provision of the law to absurdity. Any individual could otherwise steal property not his own, and convey a good title to another, or certainly transmit a good title to a successor." It seems hardly necessary to demonstrate the fallacy of this argument; the law provides ample remedies against a guilty receiver of stolen property, and provides means of restitution of the property to its lawful owner, and an innocent receiver of stolen property cannot be prosecuted criminally, although the law can force him to make restitution. Such analogies, however, are wide of the mark. The District Magistrate writes as if the Municipality in the case of an old standing encroachment not made by the present owner of the adjoining premises were without a remedy if a prosecution under section 122 is not available. Such is not, however, the case. Sub-section (2) of section 67 of the Act provides full means of redress, and these means can be enforced by the penal provisions of section 139, and otherwise. The word "such" in the sub-section refers back to the words "structure encroaching on any street" in sub-section (1), and not only to new encroachment, as is clear from the proviso in which encroachments of very old standing are referred to. The Municipality has, therefore, ample means of enforcing the Municipal law without employing section 122 in a case to which that section does not apply. On the ground that a person cannot be convicted under section 122 of encroaching in respect of an encroachment not proved to have been made by himself, I find the conviction to be illegal. I set aside the conviction and sentence and acquit the applicant. The fine, if paid, must be refunded.

Conviction set aside.

Mr. V. V. Chetale, for the Non-Applicants.

ORDER.—On the 24th June 1913 one Honia, who was the owner of Survey Number 25, leased it for two years to the plaintiffs. Subsequently Honia sold to Motilal, the predecessor-in-title of the defendant applicants, a number of fields including Survey Number 25. Criminal proceedings were instituted under section 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure in view of disputes between Honia and Motilal regarding the possession of these fields. They were ordered to be kept under attachment and the fields were leased out by the Tahsildar. On the 24th March 1916 the plaintiffs instituted Suit No. 73 of 1916 against Motilal and the heirs of Honia for a declaration that the plaintiffs were entitled to the rent of field No. 25 alleged to have been in deposit with the Criminal Court. This claim was admitted by Motilal and the other defendants and the plaintiffs were given a declaration as prayed for. The present suit has been instituted against the widows of Motilal for the recovery of the amount of rent which by the previous suit it has already been declared that the plaintiffs were entitled to. The main plea of the defendants applicants is that the suit is barred by Order II, rule 2.

The Small Causes Court has overruled this plea and has passed a decree for the amount claimed.

It has been found by the lower Court that the plaintiffs were not aware of the fact that the money had been paid over to Motilal prior to the institution of Suit No. 73 of 1916. Their allegation in the previous suit was that money was still in deposit, an allegation which was not denied by Motilal. The finding regarding the plaintiffs' ignorance of the Criminal Court having paid over the lease money to the defendant appears to me to be justified by the evidence on record, and I must accept this finding. It is, however, urged that the plaintiffs had notice of the payment, inasmuch as the slightest enquiry would have led to the discovery of this fact. This may be conceded. The lower Court has decided the case following a passage from the judgment of the Privy Council, and the argument before me has been practically confined to a discussion as to the meaning of the passage.

In Amanat Bibi v. Imdad Husain (1) their Lordships say: "the fair result of the evidence is that at the date of the former suit the respondent was not aware of the right on which he is now insisting. A right, which a litigant possesses without knowing or ever having known that he possesses it, can hardly be regarded as a portion of his claim" within the meaning of the section in question. For the applicants it is contended that by the use of the word "aware" their Lordships were referring to cases of both actual and constructive knowledge. I do not think so, for in a subsequent passage their Lordships speak of knowing. I hold that the view taken by the lower Court is correct.

Reference is made to the provisions of section 42 of the Specific Relief Act, and it is urged that the plaintiffs were entitled to consequential relief in the former suit by way of injunction, if not also by way of an order for payment of the money. This may be true, and if the plea had been raised in Suit No. 73 the plaint would have been allowed to be amended or the suit dismissed in accordance with the provisions of section 42. This cannot, how-

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court of Madura, in Appeal Suit No. 250 of 1916, preferred against the decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge of Madura, in Original Suit No. 16 of 1916.

Mr. K. S. Jayarama Aiyar, for the Appellant.

Messrs C. V. Ananthakrishna Aiyar and K. Sankarasubba Aiyar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—It is first contended that the right of a prior mortgagee obtained by subrogation cannot be enforced by suit, but can only be used as a defence against subsequent encumbrances, and reliance is placed on certain observations in Arumugusundarn v. Narasimha Iyer (1), quoted with approval in Rajah of Kalahasti v. Prayag Dossjee (2). In the present case, however, the right was used as a shield and plaintiff's mortgage right was recognised by the subsequent mortgagee when the property was brought to sale in execution of his decree. The right of subrogation is an equitable right and in the present case, being a mere simple mortgage right, it can now only be enforced against the auction-purchaser by suit. To recognise an equitable right and then refuse the means of enforcing it would in effect result in refusing the equity.

We cannot, therefore, accept the contention that such right cannot in any event be enforced by suit and we are supported in this view by the opinion of the Allahabad High Court in Gur Narain v. Shadi Lal (3). This objection must, therefore, fail.

It is next contended that plaintiff has obtained no right of subrogation because he paid off the prior mortgage out of the purchase-money, and we have been referred to numerous cases in support of this contention. The principle that has been applied in all these cases is the same, and each case has been decided on the question of whether it was or was not the intention of the purchaser to keep the mortgage alive, and the presumption is in favour of its being so kept when it is to the purchaser's interest to do so. In this case the question of intention was not raised in the lower Courts. As plaintiffs' right had been recognised by the puisne mortgagee, we cannot allow this question of fact to be re-opened, especially as the available evidence is against appellant.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Trusts Act (II of 1882), s. 88—Person in fiduciary position taking advantage of position and securing benefit—Transaction, validity of—Contract Act (IX of 1872), ss. 19, 19A, 64.

Plaintiff and her sister, who had been brought up in the house of their uncle, the defendant, and were under his influence, executed a sale-deed in his favour for an inadequate consideration. After the death of her sister the plaintiff brought a suit to recover the property conveyed by the sale-deed:

Held, that the defendant stood in a fiduciary position towards the plaintiff and her sister and that, therefore, under section 88 of the Trusts Act, the sale-deed was null and void both as regards the share of the plaintiff and that of her sister. [p. 884, col. 1; p. 885, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the decision of the Assistant Judge, Poona, in Appeal No. 113 of 1915, confirming the decree passed by the Additional Subordinate Judge, Karad, in Civil Suit No. 22 of 1914.

Mr. Coyajee (with him Mr. K. H. Kelkar), for the Appellant.

Mr. Jayakar (with him Mr. K. P. Padhye), for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff sued for a declaration that a sale-deed executed by her and her sister Manjoola on the 3rd August 1911 in favour of their uncle, the defendant, was null and void, and to recover possession of the property described therein. Manjoola, the plaintiff's sister, died in February 1912, and the plaintiff claims both in her own right, and in the right of Manjoola as her heir, to recover the property.

The first question is whether the plaintiff is the heir of Manjoola. That depends upon the question whether Manjoola was married by the asura form of marriage or by an approved form. If she was married by the asura form, then the plaintiff is her heir. It is held by both Courts that dej was paid on Manjoola's marriage, and that the defendant postponed that marriage because the dej had not been paid. They, therefore, came to the conclusion that the dej was paid to the defendant as a bride price. The marriage was, therefore, in the asura form.

It has been held by the lower Courts that the appellant was in a fiduciary relation to his nieces. They were brought up in his house and acted under his influence. The Courts also held that the price paid under the sale-deed as a consideration for the transfer of the plaintiff and her sister's property to the defendant was inadequate.

Assuming the plaintiff is the heiress of Manjoola, it is contended that claiming through Manjoola she has no right to exercise the option to avoid the deed as to one moiety of the property, since Manjoola in her lifetime did not exercise the option and a right dependent on the will of an individual is not transmissible to his heirs to exercise at their will and not that of the person through whom they claim.

The argument may be put thus:—

Under the Indian Contract Act all agreements fulfilling the conditions of section 10 are contracts.

One of those conditions is free consent of competent parties. But the absence of free consent from causes specified in section 14, namely, coercion, etc., does not prevent the agreement from being a contract. The contract only becomes voidable at the option of the party whose consent is caused (sections 19 and 19A).

In dealing with performance of such contracts in Chapter IV, section 64, the Act reserves no right expressly to the representative of the party whose unfree consent was obtained, although section 45 of the same Chapter provides for devolution of certain contractual rights where but for express provision the death of a joint promisee would bar such devolution.

Moreover section 86 of the Indian Trusts Act, which is in pari materia with sections 19 and 19A of the Indian Contract Act, is open to similar criticism since sections 81 and 83 refer expressly to representatives, while section 86 apparently only relates to the lifetime of a transferor.

Again Act XII of 1855, though it gives a right to representatives to sue for compensation for wrongs which have caused pecuniary loss to the estate of a deceased person, does not give any right of suit to avoid contracts for wrongful action.

The Probate and Administration Act, section 88, gives the executor or administrator the same power to sue as the deceased in respect of all causes of action that survive the deceased. But it is contended that there is no cause of action till the person unduly influenced has indicated his election to avoid the contract.

This argument might be pertinent and require serious consideration, if we were dealing with a case of a contract effected by undue influence in which the parties were not in a fiduciary relation to each other and in which the influencing party had not acquired possession of property of the party influenced. When property has been acquired by a party by using for his own advantage his fiduciary position, the case falls under section 88 of the Indian Trusts Act, which runs as follows:—

"Where a trustee, executor, partner, agent, director of a company, legal adviser, or other person bound in a fiduciary character to protect the interests of another person, by availing himself of his character, gains for himself any pecuniary advantage, or where any person so bound enters into any dealings under circumstances in which his own interests are, or may be, adverse to those of such other person and thereby gains for himself a pecuniary advantage, he must hold for the benefit of such other person the advantage so gained."

This section embodies a principle acted on in many English cases. It is sufficient to mention Stump v. Gaby (1) and Gresley v. Mousley (2), where devisees of the party influenced were allowed to set aside conveyances of their testators to solicitors on the ground that the testator by reason of the breach of trust of his grantee still retained a devisable right to the property in equity.

In Stump v. Gaby (1) it was said :—
"I do not deny that a deed may be so fraudulent as to be set aside at law; this, however, is not such a case; but I will assume that the conveyance might have been set aside in equity for fraud: what then is the interest of a party in an estate which he has conveyed to his attorney under circumstances which would give a right in this Court to have the conveyance set aside? In the view of this Court he remains the owner, subject to the repayment of the money which has been advanced by the attorney, and the consequence is that he may devise the estate, not as a legal estate, but as an equitable estate, wholly irrespective of all question as to any rights of entry or action, leaving the conveyance to have its full operation at law, but looking at the equitable right to have it set aside in this Court. The testator, therefore, had a devisable interest. My strong impression is that this very point is concluded upon authority, but if not I am ready to make an authority on the present occasion, and to decide that, assuming the conveyance to have been voidable, the grantor had an equitable estate which he might have devised, and that being so he has in the clearest terms devised the estate, and thereby prevented the descent to his heir-at-law. I give no opinion as to what would have been the case if he had not devised the estate."

Apparently this is the idea underlying suits by representatives such as Holman v. Loynes (3) and Wright v. Vanderplank (4).

In such cases one comes very near treating the conveyances as void in equity and thus taking them in substance out of the range of voidable contracts.

The English Courts, however, have applied to them the tests applicable to cases of voidable contracts, such as that lapse of time without rescinding will furnish evidence that the party influenced has determined to affirm the contract, though delay is not imputable against him till he has such knowledge as he was bound to avail himself of, the onus being on the other side to prove such knowledge and the time of its acquisition: see Leake on Contract, Part I, Chapter VI, s. II.

Since the facts of this case as found by the lower Courts clearly bring it within the scope of section 88 of the Indian Trusts Act, we affirm the decree declaring the sale-deed to be null and void. We direct inquiry as to the amount of the consideration paid by the appellant in discharging the mortgages which were binding on the estate and that on the respondent paying within six months the sum which may be found due on such account the appellant do deliver to her possession of the property in suit.

Execution of decree—Mortgage-decree—Sale—Compromise—Sale, whether can be set aside by consent—Court, power of.

Certain property was sold in execution of a mortgage decree and was purchased by one of the decree-holders. The judgment-debtor applied to set aside the sale on the ground that a compromise had been arrived at between the parties prior to the sale. The decree-holders, through their Pleader, consented to the sale being set aside:

Held, that there being no opposition on the part either of the purchaser or of the decree-holders, the Court had power to set aside the sale.

First appeal from an order of the First Additional Subordinate Judge, Aligarh.

Mr. Bency Kumar Mukerji, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—The facts connected with this appeal are as follows:—There had been a mortgage decree. The property was advertised and put up to sale in the usual way and actually sold. After the sale one of the decree-holders purchased it (in all probability on behalf of himself and the other decree-holder). It appears that there had been some attempt at a compromise before the sale actually took place, which fell through. It is alleged that the property was sold considerably below its value, because possible bidders were kept away thinking that the matter had been compromised between the parties. That something of this kind occurred is strongly corroborated by the fact that when an application to set aside the sale was made, the Pleader for both decree-holders signed the petition in token of the agreement of the decree-holders that the sale should be set aside. The learned Judge has not disputed the matters that we have mentioned in his judgment. On the contrary his judgment simply says that there is no law by which a sale can be set aside when the judgment-debtor and decree-holder consent. In the present case both the decree-holders through their Pleader consented to the sale being set aside; and one or both of the decree-holders was the purchaser or purchasers of the property. Therefore every one concerned consented, and there does not appear to have been any opposition on the part of either the purchaser or the decree-holders. Under these circumstances we think the Court below ought to have set aside the sale and had power to do so. Even in this Court apparently the decree-holders, who, as we have already said, are also the purchasers, are absent and apparently raise no objection to the appeal being allowed. We allow the appeal, set aside the order of the Court below and set aside the sale, and direct that the property be re-sold according to law. We make no order as to costs.

Let our order be sent down as soon as possible.

Appeal allowed.

Section 105 (2) of the Civil Procedure Code precludes a lower Court from treating the remand order of the Appellate Court as a nullity owing to the want of jurisdiction in the latter to pass it. [p. 889, col. 2.]

A party who omits to raise the question of the jurisdiction of the Appellate Court at the hearing of an appeal and to appeal from the decision reached, cannot be allowed to object to that decision in the subordinate Court to which the matter in dispute is remanded. [p. 889, col. 2.]

Section 17 of the Court Fees Act applies to alternative reliefs claimed with reference to more causes of action than one. The operation of the section is not necessarily confined to cases where cumulative reliefs are claimed. [p. 889, col. 2.]

It is only where a sale is void ab initio that Article 62 of Schedule I of the Limitation Act can apply to a suit by the vendee for refund of the purchase-money. If, however, the vendee has actually obtained and held possession of the property, Article 97 may be applied even if the sale turns out to be void ab initio, for otherwise the claim for refund might be barred although the vendee had been given no occasion to sue. The same Article is applicable where there is a subsequent failure of consideration. [p. 890, cols. 1 & 2]

Where the vendor has no title to convey, the Article applicable to a suit for refund of the purchase-money is Article 116, and time in such a case begins to run from the date of the execution of the conveyance if there is no question of fraud. [p. 890, cols. 1 & 2.]

The covenant implied under section 55 (2) of the Transfer of Property Act is merely that the interest which the seller professes to transfer to the buyer subsists and that he has power to transfer the same. [p. 890, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Saugor, dated the 26th July 1917, in Civil Appeal No. 12/111 of 1917, against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Saugor, dated the 22nd March 1917, in Civil Suit No. 22 of 1915.

Messrs. P. R. Naidu and G. R. Fraoñan. for the Appellants.

Mr. S. Ramdas, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—For the apprehension of the questions which arise for determination in this appeal it is necessary to state at some length the history of the relations between the parties.

On the 19th October 1908 a party of persons, who will hereinafter be referred to as Duli Chand, obtained a decree for money against one Mukundi Lal, since deceased, and his son, the present respondent Gore Lal. In execution of this decree Duli Chand on the 20th October 1908 attached Mukundi Lal's house in the town of Saugor. On the same day the judgment-debtors had conveyed the house to the present appellants, who may conveniently be indicated by the single name Dharam Chand, the price mentioned in the sale-deed being Rs. 999.

Dharam Chand objected to the attachment, but his objection was dismissed on the 5th December 1908, the Court holding under section 276, Code of Civil Procedure, 1882, that the sale was void as against all claims enforceable under the attachment. The house was then sold on the 17th December 1908 in execution of Duli Chand's decree and on the 14th April 1909 the auction purchaser Muni Lal, who had paid Rs. 560, [entered] into possession.

Meanwhile on the 15th December 1908 Mukundi Lal and Gore Lal had preferred an appeal from the decree passed against them, with the result that the Divisional Judge remanded the case for a complete retrial. The claim of Dali Chand was eventually dismissed on the 13th September 1910 and exactly a year later the Divisional Judge affirmed that decision.

On the 15th August 1911 Dharam Chand brought against Muni Lal a suit of the kind contemplated by rule 63, Order XXI, First Schedule, to the Civil Procedure Code. This was dismissed as time-barred by the District Judge on the 28th February 1912 and his decision was upheld, first by the Divisional Judge on the 15th July 1912 and finally by this Court in Second Appeal No 539 of 1912 on the 22nd July 1913.

DHARAMCHAND V. GORELAL.

Meanwhile in a suit for money (No. 99 of 1911) filed by Dharam Chand against Mukundi Lal and Gore Lal the character of the sale effected on the 20th October 1908 was put in issue, the defence having denounced it as fictitious and designed to shield the house from sale in execution of Duli Chand's decree. The decision was in favour of Dharam Chand, the trial Judge deciding that the sale was real and for consideration, and his view was upheld in first appeal by the District Judge on the 25th March 1913 and by this Court in Second Appeal No. 350 of 1913 on the 16th April 1914.

On the 10th January 1912 Mukundi Lal and Gore Lal applied to the Court which had finally dismissed Duli Chand's suit of 1908 demanding restitution of the house bought by Muni Lal or alternatively Rs. 5,000 as its value. Dharam Chand was allowed to intervene in this proceeding and to plead that any order for restitution must be for his benefit, inasmuch as his title to the house had been held to be good in Suit No. 99 of 1911: eventually his application was dismissed on the 22nd December 1914 on the ground that he had no locus standi as against Duli Chand or Muni Lal.

Dharam Chand's next step was to file the suit out of which the present appeal arises. Mukundi Lal had by this time died and Gore Lal and Duli Chand were joined as defendants. The following alternative reliefs were claimed:

(1) Rs. 560, the auction-price of the house, together with such compensation as might be awarded to Gore Lal as the result of his application for restitution in Duli Chand's suit and an injunction restraining Duli Chand from paying this compensation, when determined, to Gore Lal.

(2) Rs. 999 from Gore Lal only by way of compensation for the eviction due to his defective title.

The plaint also contained the usual prayer for any other relief which the Court might think fit to grant.

The trial Judge held that the plaintiff's claim for restitution in Duli Chand's suit having been dismissed by the order of the 22nd December 1914 which had not been appealed from, no relief could be granted against Duli Chand. The alternative claim he regarded as time-barred, more than three years having elapsed from the 5th December 1908 when the plaintiff's objection to the attachment in Duli Chand's suit was disallowed.

In appeal the District Judge allowed the plaintiff to withdraw from the suit as against Duli Chand. He then remanded the case for a fresh decision on the ground that the judgment did not comply with the requirements of rules 4 and 5, Order XX, First Schedule, to the Code of Civil Procedure, and that the pleadings required amplification. The date of the remand order is the 13th May 1916.

By the time the further hearing in the Court of first instance began, the Divisional Judge had awarded Gore Lal Rs. 2,500 by way of restitution for loss of the house. The trial Judge then permitted the plaint to be amended so as to claim the following reliefs as against Gore Lal only:

(1) A declaration that the plaintiff is entitled to receive the sum of Rs. 2,500 awarded to the defendant as damages for loss of his house and a direction for payment of the same by the defendant.

(2) That on the aforesaid compensation being deposited in Court by Duli Chand it should be paid to the plaintiff.

The trial Judge again dismissed the suit. The first ground for his decision is that the District Judge had no jurisdiction to hear the appeal from the first decree of dismissal, the reason being that the value of the suit as originally framed was in excess of Rs. 1,000, and that consequently the first decree must be regarded as still in force and final, no proper appeal having been preferred against it within the time allowed by law. He went on to hold that the plaintiff had no cause of action, inasmuch as the defendant was in no way accountable for the dispossession and no covenant for quiet enjoyment is included in the sale-deed. Lastly he considered that even conceding that the plaintiff could have claimed refund of his purchase-money from the defendant, the claim would be time-barred under Article 116 of the Limitation Schedule, the cause of action for such relief having arisen either on the date of the sale or on the 5th

DHARAMCHAND v. GORELAL.

December 1903, when the objection to the attachment of the house was disallowed.

In appeal the District Judge held that section 105 (2), Civil Procedure Code, precluded the lower Court from treating his predecessor's remand order of the 13th May 1916 as a nullity. With regard to the merits he considered that no cause of action would arise until the defendant actually received the compensation claimed from Duli Chand and that until such receipt no question of limitation could arise. The appeal was accordingly dismissed on the 26th July last, the parties being directed to bear their own costs in the District Judge's Court. On the same day the learned Judge passed an order on Gore Lal's application for restitution in Duli Chand's suit that Duli Chand should pay Gore Lal Rs. 2,154-9-7, a direction against which no appeal has yet been preferred.

The plaintiff has appealed to this Court and Gore Lal has preferred cross-objections. In this Court it is contended for the appellant that the suit is one for breach of a covenant for title and that the defendant must be regarded as a trustee for any sum he may eventually recover by way of restitution from Duli Chand, also that the lower Appellate Court has overlooked the general prayer under which the plaintiff would at any rate be entitled to get back his purchase-money.

With regard to the question whether the defendant can be regarded as trustee of such money as he may hereafter recover from Duli Chand sections 63 and 94, Indian Trusts Act, 1882, are relied upon. The following are the terms of those provisions:—

63. "Where the trustee has disposed of trust property and the money or other property which he has received therefor can be traced in his hands, or the hands of his legal representative or legatee, the beneficiary has, in respect thereof, rights as nearly as may be the same as his rights in respect of the original trust property."

94. "In any case not coming within the scope of any of the preceding sections, where there is no trust, but the person having possession of property has not the whole beneficial interest therein, he must hold the property for the benefit of the persons having such interest, or the residue thereof (as the case may be), to the extent necessary to satisfy their just demands."

It is said that the defendant should be regarded as having disposed of the house and as having held it until disposal by auction-sale in trust for the plaintiff. Neither of these propositions seems to me to be tenable. The house was in fact held by the plaintiff and it was disposed of not by but in spite of the defendant, and from the moment of parting with the house to the plaintiff the defendant ceased to have anything to which a trust could attach. I am referred in this connection to Torrance v. Bolton (1). In that case certain property was put up for sale, and in the particulars, which were advertised, it was described as an immediate absolute reversion in a free-hold estate, falling into possession on the death of a lady in her seventieth year; and by the conditions of sale, which were read in the auction-room immediately before the sale but were not printed or circulated among those present, the property was stated to be subject to three mortgages. The property was bought by the plaintiff, who stated that he was deaf and did not understand that he was buying merely an equity of redemption. It was held on a bill filed by the plaintiff to have the contract for sale rescinded, that the description of the property and the particulars of sale were misleading, that the onus was therefore on the vendor to show that the purchaser was not actually misled and that as he had failed to do so the plaintiff was entitled to have the contract rescinded and his deposit returned. This decision was affirmed in appeal: see Torrance v. Bolton (2). There is evidently nothing in the circumstances of that case to support the contention that the vendor in the present case should be deemed to be a trustee for any restitution he may obtain in a suit of his own against the third person. The plaintiff-appellant in the present case has really no locus standi of any sort with regard to the litigation between Gore Lal and Duli Chand, inasmuch as for the purposes of that litigation his purchase from Gore Lal is of no effect. For this reason, and not because it should be regarded as premature, I hold that the new relief asked for in the amended plaint has been rightly disallowed.

It will be convenient to deal at this stage with the cross-objection of the defendant to the effect that the District Judge's order of remand dated the 13th May 1916 was without jurisdiction. That view was based upon the assumption that the value of the suit for the purposes of jurisdiction should be treated as exceeding Rs. 1,000, a Court fee being payable on each of the reliefs claimed in the original plaint. Neelakundhan v. Ananthakrishna Ayyar (3) was relied upon. In that case it was held that the operation of section 17, Court Fees Act, is not necessarily confined to cases where cumulative reliefs are claimed. The alternative claims there were:—

(1) For redemption based upon the alleged right of the plaintiff as mortgagor,

(2) for various sums of money on the footing of a further mortgage to be executed by the plaintiff to the defendants in accordance with certain provisions contained in the earlier mortgage.

It was held that these claims were distinct matters which could have been the grounds of separate suits and that they were, therefore, distinct subjects within the meaning of section 17. The learned Judges also remarked as follows:—

"The phrase 'two or more distinct subjects' in section 17 may not admit of precise definition applicable to all cases, and it may be that where reliefs are claimed in the alternative with reference to the same cause of action, section 17 would not govern the case. That may also be so where the relief claimed is one and the same, though the claim is sought to be made out on distinct or alternative grounds."

The present seems to be a case of alternative reliefs being claimed with reference to causes of action of which the plaintiff's loss of the house bought from the defendant Gore Lal forms part. The foundations of the claims are not, however, precisely the same. As pointed out by the trial Judge the relief against Duli Chand was based on the plaintiff's right as vendee to stand in Gore Lal's shoes, whereas refund of the purchase-money was asked for on the ground that the sale had failed owing to a defect in Gore Lal's title. The position somewhat resembles that in Hashmat-un-nissa Begam v. Muhammad Abdul Karim (4), where section 17, Court Fees Act, was held to be applicable. In Kashinath Narayan v. Govinda (5) there was clearly a single cause of action and the decision that section 17, is applicable only to a case of cumulative reliefs sought by the plaintiff appears to go further than the language of section 20 warrants. On the whole, then, I am inclined to think that the trial Judge was right as to the valuation of the suit in its original shape for the purposes of jurisdiction. I agree, however, with the lower Appellate Court that the trial Judge had no power to treat the Appellate Court's order as passed without jurisdiction. The trial Judge relied on Narayan Raoji Ranade v. Gangaram Ratanchand Marwadi (6) and Rajalakshmi Dasee v. Katyayani Dasee (7) but in both those cases the objection to the jurisdiction of the Appellate Court was raised in a higher Court and in neither had there been an order of remand protected by section 105 (2), Code of Civil Procedure. In the Calcutta case the point was taken in a distinct litigation from that in which the appellate decree held bad for want of jurisdiction was passed. I know of no authority expressly covering the point under consideration. On the other hand it appears to me wholly unreasonable that a party having omitted to raise the question of jurisdiction at the hearing and to appeal from the decision reached should be allowed to object to that decision in the Subordinate Court to which the matter in dispute has been remanded. The objection, therefore, fails.

It remains to consider the alternative claim of the plaintiff for refund of his purchase-money (Rs. 999). This, though not expressly reproduced in the amended plaint, is covered by the general prayer which appears there as in the original plaint. With this the lower Appellate Court has entirely failed to deal. Nor has the trial Judge complied with the directions in the remand order of the 13th May 1916. In connection with the alternative relief which has already been disallowed, the learned District Judge considered that Article 62 or possibly Article 29 of the Limitation Schedule might apply when the defendant recovers the money payable to him by way of restitution. Article 29 has clearly no application, Gore Lal not being the person responsible for seizure of the property and the property being immovable, Article 62 applies to a suit for money payable by defendant to the plaintiff for money received by the defendant for the plaintiff's use. But when the purchase-money was paid, Gore Lal had still a title which he could transfer and the position which subsequently arose amounted to a failure of consideration, so that Article 97 as more specific than Article 62 would govern the case: see Nagoba v. Madholala Kalar (8), Hanuman Ramat v. Hanuman Mandur (9) and Bahadur Lal v. Jadhao (10). It is only where a sale is void ab initio that Article 62 can apply to a suit like the present: see Venkatanarasimhula v. Peramma (11). And if the vendee has actually obtained and held possession, Article 97 may be applied even if the sale turns out to be void ab initio, for otherwise the claim for refund might be barred although the vendee had been given no occasion to sue: see Narsing Shivbakas Marwadi v. Pachu Ram-bakas (12). In this Court it is urged that Article 116 applies. That this is so where the vendor has no title to convey appears from numerous authorities of which it will suffice to cite Bahadur Lal v. Jadhao (10), Arunachala Aiyar v. Ramasami Aiyar (13) and Pirbhu v. Wairbi (14). According to the later of the two decisions of this Court time in such a case will run from the execution of the conveyance if there is no question of fraud. In the present case, however, it cannot be said that the defendant had absolutely no title and it is no part of the plaintiff's case as against the defendant that the attachment of Duli Chand preceded his purchase. The covenant implied under section 55 (2), Transfer of Property Act, is merely that the interest which the seller professes to transfer to the buyer subsists and that he has power to transfer the same. The defendant has now in fact established by securing dismissal of Duli Chand's suit that the attachment which he all along resisted should not have been made, and in the circumstances I do not think it can be held that he has been guilty of any breach of the implied contract at any rate if the sale to the plaintiff preceded Duli Chand's attachment. The plaintiff on the other hand failed to do all that he might have done, in that he delayed suing to establish his title to the house until the suit allowed by rule 63, Order XXI, First Schedule, to the Code of Civil Procedure, had become time-barred. The case then reduces itself to one in which the consideration has failed and is, therefore, governed by Article 97 of the Limitation Schedule: the plaintiff having been dispossessed on the 14th April 1909, the suit is long time-barred and must fail accordingly. If, however, it be taken that Duli Chand's attachment was effected before the sale to the plaintiff, then such flaw as the attachment created in the plaintiff's title was already in existence when the sale took place and the cause of action for a suit to recover compensation for the breach of the implied covenant of title arose either on the 20th October 1908 or at latest on the date (17th December 1908) of the auction-purchase by Muni Lal. Whichever of those dates is adopted the suit is beyond time. Section

DEO NARAIN SINGH v. SITLA BAKSH SINGH.

14 of the Indian Limitation Act affords the plaintiff no protection for his suit against Muni Lal was dismissed as time-barred and that suit, therefore, did not fail from defective jurisdiction or other cause of a like nature: see Bishambhur Haldar v. Bonomali Haldar (15). I hold, therefore, that the alternative claim for refund of the plaintiff's purchase-money is barred by time, whether Duli Chand's attachment was effected before or after the sale to the plaintiff.

It remains to consider the cross-objection to the effect that the lower Appellate Court should not have directed the defendant to bear his own costs in that Court merely because the plaintiff succeeded on the question whether the trial Judge had power to treat the order of remand dated the 17th May 1916 as bad for want of jurisdiction. Inasmuch as the raising of this question involved no extra cost to either side and its decision in no way affected the amount of relief allowed, which was actually nil, I do not think there was any good reason for departing from the general rule that costs follow the event.

The appeal is dismissed and the plaintiff will pay the defendant's costs in all three Courts, including the Court-fee on the defendant's cross-objection which has been paid solely on the amount of the defendant's costs in the lower Appellate Court.

Appeal dismissed.

Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), ss. 95, 177 (f), 202

—Jurisdiction of Revenue Courts—Suit under s. 95 for declaration of nature of tenancy—Objection as to jurisdiction of Revenue Court—Appeal, whether lies to District Judge.

A defendant in a revenue suit cannot be allowed by formally raising an untenable plea of jurisdiction to take the case from the Revenue Court to the Civil Court. [p. 892, col. 1.]

Plaintiff was directed by a Civil Court, under section 202 of the Agra Tenancy Act, to bring a suit in the Revenue Court for determination of the nature of his tenancy. He thereupon brought a suit under section 95 of the Act which was heard by an Assistant Collector. The defendant objected that the Revenue Court had no jurisdiction to hear the suit, but the objection was overruled:

Held, that the suit, being one under section 95 of the Agra Tenancy Act and having been brought in compliance with an order of the Civil Court, could be heard only by a Revenue Court, and that no question of jurisdiction had, therefore, been decided by the Revenue Court, so that an appeal against the decision of the Revenue Court did not lie to the District Judge under section 177, clause (f) of the Agra Tenancy Act. [p. 892, col. 1.]

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Benares, modifying that of the Assistant Collector, First Class, Jaunpur.

Mr. Haribans Sahai, for the Appellants.

Mr. A. P. Dube, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises under the following circumstances. The present defendants brought a suit in the Civil Court for possession against the plaintiffs as trespassers. The latter pleaded that they held the land as tenants to the plaintiffs. The Civil Court thereupon made an order directing the defendants in that suit to institute within three months a suit in the Revenue Court for determination of the question. This order was made under the provisions of section 202 of the Tenancy Act. This suit was thereupon instituted asking for a declaration of the nature of the tenancy under section 95 of the Tenancy Act. An objection was taken as to his jurisdiction to hear the suit, which he at once overruled. He then dealt with the suit and made a decree. An appeal was preferred to the District Judge and cross-objections filed by the other side. The learned District Judge entertained the appeal on the ground that a question of jurisdiction had been decided. He then dealt with the case on the merits. An appeal has been preferred by the defendants and the plaintiffs have filed cross-objections. In our opinion no question of jurisdiction was in reality decided by the Assistant Collector. In the first place, the suit was brought in compliance with the order of the Civil Court that a suit should be instituted in the Revenue Court. In the next place, the suit was under section 95 of the Tenancy Act, which Act expressly provides that suits under section 95 must be brought in the Revenue Court and no other. It was, therefore, absolutely absurd to contend that the Revenue Court had no jurisdiction to hear the present suit. It would be reducing matters to an absolute absurdity to hold that the defendants in a revenue suit could by formally raising an absolutely untenable plea of jurisdiction take every case from the Revenue Court to the Civil Court. We accordingly allow the appeal to this extent that we set aside the decree of the learned District Judge and remand the case to him with directions to return the memorandum of appeal and the cross-objections for presentation to the proper Court. Costs here and heretofore will be costs in the cause.

Case remanded.

A claim of title by adverse possession raises a mixed question of law and fact and should, therefore, be raised in the Court of the first instance so that Appeal from the decree of the Additional District Judge, Balaghat, in Civil Appeal No. 450 of 1917, dated the 12th January 1918.

Mr. K. K. Gandhi, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—The suit out of which this second appeal arises was brought by the respondent Diwan as transferee of the malguzar Abdul Aziz Khan, defendant No. 2, to recover possession of a house site in the town of Balaghat from the present appellant Pralhad Singh, defendant No. 1. The malguzar supported the claim of the plaintiff as his transferee, alleging that the site was originally occupied by the house of one Sukhia, who left Balaghat over 12 years before the suit and had since been lying vacant and was, therefore, under the wajib-ul-arz the property of the malguzar. The present appellant pleaded that the land belonged to him and to his ancestors before him and that Sukhia, a relative, occupied it on his behalf.

The conveyance (Exhibit P2) to the plaintiff is dated the 1st November 1916.

The trial Judge found that the land was first occupied by the house of Sukhia's mother Gajri who was succeeded in possession by Sukhia, that Sukhia abandoned the site more than 12 years before the suit, and that it became the property of the malguzar but lay vacant till occupied by the plaintiff. The claim for possession was, therefore, decreed.

In appeal the Additional District Judge held that Sukhia left the house and its site 10 or 12 years before the suit; that in the absence of any evidence to establish the title of the plaintiff or any ancestor of his Sukhia must be deemed to have been the owner by reason of the presumption on which section 110, Indian Evidence Act, is based; that Sukhia abandoned the land which consequently reverted to the malguzar; and that the appellant made some show of occupying the site after Sukhia left it, but that being a mere trespasser his occupation, even if it exceeded

PRALHAD SINGH v. ABDUL AZIZ KHAN.

12 years in duration, could not afford a title as against the malguzar or his transferee. Narain v. Behari (1) was cited as negating any acquisition of title by the appellant. The appeal was accordingly dismissed and Pralhad Singh has now come to this Court.

An entirely new point is taken in the first ground of appeal, viz., that as Balaghat is a Municipal town the Municipality, not the malguzar, must be the owner if the title of the original owner has been extinguished by abandonment. There is, however, no basis in the pleadings or evidence for the assumption that the site in question does not form part of the area settled with the malguzar. The wajib-ul arz was relied upon by the plaintiff and the defendant Abdul Aziz Khan and I know no authority for the proposition that the land within the limits of a Municipal town must, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, be taken to belong to the Municipal Committee. The contrary is clearly indicated by sections 52 and 53 of the C. P. Municipal Act, 1903, where the property which vests in and belongs to the Committee is described and the acquisition of land within the limits of the Municipality, under the Land Acquisition Act, 1894, is contemplated. This ground is thus without substance.

In the second ground it is said that having found the appellant to have exercised some sort of possession over the land, the presumption recognized by section 110, Indian Evidence Act, should have been made in his favour. To this the answer is that Sukhia having been the owner till she left Balaghat and the appellant not claiming through her, there is in view of the terms of the wajib-ul arz no room for any presumption in favour of the appellant, who set up an independent title and altogether failed to adduce evidence in support of it.

Thirdly it is said that Narain v. Behari (1), the case cited by the lower Appellate Court, has no bearing, inasmuch as the point decided there was merely that a transferee from the occupant of a village site cannot claim a greater right than his transferor had. The appellant further relies on the fourth ground of appeal on adverse possession for more than 12 years as giving him a good title against the malguzar. There is, however, no finding that he enjoyed adverse possession for more than 12 years, nor was it part of his case that after Sukhia left Balaghat he had such possession as against the malguzar. The position he now seeks to take up was not even suggested in the grounds of appeal to the lower Appellate Court, in fact one of the grounds of first appeal is that abandonment of site by Sukhia had not been made out. It appears that on leaving Balaghat Sukhia went to live with the appellant at Kanki, and it is said in this Court that she died at Kanki while still living with him some three or four years later. There is nothing in the evidence to show that the appellant took possession of the land in Sukhia's lifetime and set up independent title in himself, and if he made any show of occupation before Sukhia died that may well have been regarded as made with Sukhia's consent. A claim of title by adverse possession raises a mixed question of law and fact and should, therefore, be raised in the Court of the first instance so that the opposite party may plead to the claim and evidence may be adduced thereon. The appellant to establish such a claim had to show that his possession was adequate in continuity, in publicity and in extent to extinguish the title of the true owner. See the judgment of the Privy Council in Radhamoni Debi v. Collector of Khulna (2). I have read the evidence adduced by the applicant and am clearly of opinion that it cannot suffice for this purpose and even if it were regarded as sufficient, there would remain the objection that the plaintiff and the malguzar had no notice on the pleadings of a claim by adverse possession. In Sundari Dassee v. Mudhoo Chunder Sircar (3) it was held that a plaintiff may be allowed to succeed on a title by adverse possession pleaded for the first time in a Court of Appeal, provided such a case arises on the facts stated in the plaint and the defendant is not taken by surprise. The provisions of section 54 of the U. P. The rule that a suit for pre-emption must embrace the entire property sold, unless the plaintiff is not entitled to claim pre-emption in regard to any portion thereof, is inapplicable where the interests of the vendees, inter se, are distinct or where they have since been separated or divided. JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for pre-emption. It appears that on the 18th January 1898 Gajraj Singh mortgaged the entire village Mubarakpur and an 8 annas of the village Shahpur, describing the mortgagee as Habibullah, son of Aminullah. Half of the said property was subsequently found to belong to other persons. Aminullah died on the 27th September 1898. A dispute arose on his death in regard to his estate between Gharibullah, his so-called son, and his nephews, Ruhullah, Rahmatullah, Niamatullah and Mohammad Yakub. He also left a widow Musammam Raisunnisa. On the 1st June 1901 an agreement was arrived at between the said claimants, whereby Gharibullah contented himself with a 7-annas share in the property left by Aminullah, a 4-annas share went to Musammam Raisunnisa, while the remaining 5 annas went to Ruhullah, Rahmatullah, Niamatullah and Mohammad Yakub. A decree appears to have been passed in accordance with this compromise.

Gharibullah subsequently died and his property was taken charge of by the Court of Wards. On the 25th January 1909 the Deputy Commissioner of Unao, acting as the Manager of the estate of Gharibullah, and the other persons, to whom the property of Aminullah had been allotted, filed a suit for the recovery of money due on the mortgage aforesaid, treating it as forming part of the property held by Aminullah. The plaint recited the agreement made between the heirs of Aminullah, whereby the shares of the different claimants to the estate were defined and asked that in case the heirs and representatives of the mortgagor failed to pay the mortgage money, the mortgage might be foreclosed. On the 21st January 1911 the then plaintiffs obtained a final decree for foreclosure in regard to the half share belonging to the mortgagor (Exhibit 1), which has given rise to the present claim for pre-emption. The suit was filed on the 20th January 1917 within six years from the date of the said decree.

The Court below dismissed the claim, holding that no notice had been sent to the Court of Wards as required by section 54 of U. P. Act IV of 1912, that the claim against the heirs of Mohammad Yakub was barred by limitation, and that a suit for pre-emption in regard to the property held by the remaining defendants, was not maintainable.

The provisions of section 54 of U. P. Act IV of 1912 cover all suits relating to the property of any ward, that is, any property belonging to him, though his title thereto may be defeasible by reason of a claim for pre-emption which may be maintainable in regard to the same. The contention urged on behalf of the plaintiff-appellant is that the position of a mortgagee who obtains a final decree for foreclosure without sending the notice required by section 10 of the Oudh Laws Act (XVIII of 1876) continues in spite of that decree to be that of a mortgagee qua a person entitled to claim the property by pre-emption. But such a contention is obviously untenable, because the effect of a decree for pre-emption is only to displace the title of the purchaser or of the person who obtains the final decree for foreclosure from the date when the payment is made in pursuance of that decree. Till such a decree is obtained and payment is made in accordance with it, the title of the purchaser or of the person obtaining foreclosure holds good, and if he is a ward within the meaning of section 54 of U. P. Act IV of 1912, no suit for pre-emption can lie in respect of any property held by him, till the notice required by that section is given. The share of Gharibullah, which is held by the Court of Wards, being 7 annas, that portion of the claim which relates to it cannot, therefore, be entertained.

The claim in regard to the $1\frac{1}{4}$ annas share held by Mohammad Yakub is similarly not maintainable, because Mohammad Yakub had died before the institution of the suit and his heirs were not impleaded till the period of limitation for a suit for pre-emption against them had expired. Order I, rule 3, of the Code of Civil Procedure does not apply to a case where a suit is filed against a deceased person and his heirs are subsequently sought to be brought on the record. For the purposes of section 22 of the Indian Limitation Act (IX of 1908) such heirs, whether added or substituted, must be treated as newly impleaded and the suit as against them will be deemed to have been instituted when they were so made parties. The plaintiff-appellant cannot claim the benefit of the institution of a suit against a dead person for the purpose of extending the period of limitation against his heirs. In Fatmabai v. Pirbhai Virji (1), where a suit was instituted by a person who claimed to be the heir of a deceased creditor, for the recovery of money due on a promissory note, and disputes subsequently cropped up between that person and the other heirs of the deceased, who were subsequently added as co-plaintiffs, resulting in the latter being declared to be entitled to Letters of Administration, it was held that the institution of the suit by the former did not avail for the benefit of the latter who were subsequently added as co-plaintiffs, because the former was eventually found to have had no right at all, and when the latter were impleaded, the suit had become barred by time. As pointed out in Veerappa Chetty v. Tindal Ponnen (2), there is nothing in the Code of Civil Procedure to authorise the institution of a suit against a deceased person, and the claim against the heirs of Mohammad Yakub, who were added after the period of limitation for a suit for pre-emption had expired, will be deemed to have been barred by time. The learned Counsel for the plaintiff-appellant relies on a decision in Sreekishen Chowdhry v. Ram Kristo Bhattacharjee (3), but the rules of limitation now in force were not then the same.

KASHI BAI v. SHEORAM KHUPCHAND.

The claim as against the other defendants, who represent a $7\frac{1}{4}$ -annas share, is, however, maintainable. The general rule, as laid down in Mujib-Ullah v. Umed Bibi (4) and Mahabir Prasad v. Ram Jiwan Lal (5), is that a suit for pre-emption must embrace the entire property sold, unless the plaintiff is not entitled to claim pre-emption in regard to any portion thereof. But as explained in Sheobharos Rai v. Jiach Rai (6), Ram Nath v. Badri Narain (7) and Lachhman v. Tulsi Ram (8), that rule is inapplicable where the interests of the vendees, inter se, are distinct or where they have since been separated or divided. The principle of denying a right of pre-emption, except as to the whole of the property sold, is that by breaking up the bargain, the pre-emptor may seek to take the best portion of the property and leave the worst part of it with the vendee. But where the share of each purchaser is separate and distinct, there is really no breaking up of the bargain. The preferential right of the plaintiff-appellant not being disputed, he should have been allowed a decree for pre-emption in regard to the said $7\frac{1}{4}$ -annas share out of the Mahals, which now constitute the mortgaged property.

The appeal is, therefore, allowed, and the claim of the plaintiff-appellant decreed for pre-emption in respect of a $7\frac{1}{4}$ -annas share out of the Mahals, which now constitute the mortgaged property, and in respect of which the decree for foreclosure was obtained, subject to the payment of Rs. 2,689-2-6 within one month from this date. In case of payment, the plaintiffs and defendants, other than defendant No. 1 and the heirs of Mohammad Yakub, will bear their own costs throughout. In case of non-payment the defendants shall get their costs here and hitherto from the plaintiffs. Defendant No. 1 and the heirs of Mohammad Yakub will in any event get their costs here and hitherto from the plaintiffs.

Appeal allowed.

JUDGMENT.—The two defendants and one Rajaram executed a bond on the 28th June 1913. Rajaram was at that time a minor and the defendants acted as his guardians. They also personally covenanted to repay the money. In a previous suit the plaintiff has recovered one-third of the amount due under the bond by a judgment against Rajaram. The point for decision is whether the present suit for the recovery of the remaining two-thirds is barred by any rule of law. Admittedly there is no statutory provision which bars the suit. Order II, rule 2, only applies if the second suit is brought against the same defendant. However, it is contended that the rule of English Law recognized in King v. Hoare (1) should be applied. The lower Courts have held that the rule does not apply to Mofussil of India. This view is well sup-

Hindu Law—Joint family—Agreement to separate, effect of—U. P. Land Revenue Act (III of 1901), s. 111—Partition—Jurisdiction of Civil Court to determine question of title.

Once the members of a joint Hindu family have agreed and declared their intention to hold the joint family property in definite shares, the family is no longer a joint family. It may be that no actual division of the property takes place, but the result of such agreement and declaration is that from the time it is made the parties thenceforth hold the property not as joint tenants but as tenants-in-common. [p. 907, col. 2.]

A Civil Court has no jurisdiction to determine a question of title with regard to a property under partition before a Revenue Court, unless the latter Court refers the question for decision to the former Court by an order passed explicitly under section 111 of the U. P. Land Revenue Act. [p. 902, col. 1.]

Appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Kheri, dated the 17th May 1916.

Mr. St. George Jackson, Pandit Harkaran Nath Misra and Pandit Brignath Sharga, for the Appellants.

The Hon'ble Pandit Gokaran Nath Misra and Babu Mohan Lal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is a plaintiffs' appeal arising out of a suit for partition of certain property described in List A attached to the plaint, which the plaintiffs claimed to be joint family property.

The defendants belong to the same family as the plaintiffs, all being descendants from a common ancestor named Phoka Singh, who had three sons Rup Singh, Girand Singh or Gend Singh and Meharban Singh. The latter died without issue. The plaintiffs are the sons and grandsons of Girand Singh, whilst the defendants are, respectively, the son and grandson of Rup Singh. It was alleged in the plaint that the family had remained joint up till just before the time this suit was brought. In paragraph 5 of the plaint it was stated that a year and a half or two years before the suit a separation was effected between the parties in mess and residence but that the family property had not so far been divided. The circumstance which gave rise immediately to the suit for partition was an application filed by the defendants at the end of 1913, or the beginning of 1914, for partition of Mauza Sehauna which is the family property. The plaintiffs alleged that when the application to the Revenue Court for partition was made by the defendants, the latter represented their share in the property to be two-thirds and that of the plaintiffs to be one-third only. The plaintiffs deny this and say that they are entitled to a one-half share of all the family property; and so this suit has been brought for the purpose of obtaining a declaration to this effect and in order to have a partition made upon this basis.

The case for the defendants is that the family is no longer a joint family. It was pleaded that separation took place some 60 or 65 years before the suit was filed, when Girand Singh separated himself from his two brothers Meharban Singh and Rup Singh. The defendants pleaded that after this division Meharban Singh and Rup Singh remained united. It was further pleaded that Meharban Singh made a gift of his one-third share of the family property to Bakhtawar the first defendant on the 6th of September 1873. With regard to Mauza Sehauna, the family village, the allegation is that the lands have been actually divided and that the plaintiffs are in possession of a one-third share, which is all they are entitled to. With regard to the other items of immoveable property specified in the List A attached to the plaint, the case for the defendants was that this was all self-acquired property, having come into the possession of the defendants since the time the partition was made.

The principal issues before the Subordinate Judge were, therefore, whether the family consisting of the plaintiffs and the defendants was joint or separate and whether or not the property described in the List A was joint family property. With regard to the first of these issues the Court below rightly laid the burden of proof upon the defendants. On the pleadings it clearly lay upon them to establish that the family was no longer joint but separate. The defendants called a large number of witnesses and they also produced a considerable volume of documentary evidence. A few witnesses were produced on behalf of the plaintiffs and a few documents were also put in to support the plaintiffs' case. The result was that the Subordinate Judge held that the defendants had succeeded in proving that the family had become a separate family at a period not less than 40 years before the suit was brought. He believed the oral testimony of the defendants' witnesses and he also relied strongly upon the documents which the defendants put in. In consequence of this finding he reached the further conclusion that the items of immoveable property specified in List A, other than the village Sehauna, and two houses situated in Sehauna, were the separate property of the defendants; in short, that items 2, 3, 4, 5 and 6 in the list belonged exclusively to the defendants and that the plaintiffs were not entitled to have any share. He held that the plaintiffs were entitled to have a one-third share in village Sehauna and their share of the family houses.

It has already been mentioned that before this suit was brought the defendants had applied for partition of Mauza Sehauna, and the Subordinate Judge has further held that in consequence of those partition proceedings the present suit, in so far as it relates to the division of Sehauna, is not entertainable by a Civil Court. The case for the plaintiffs therefore, substantially failed.

They now come in appeal and the memorandum of appeal contains eight grounds upon which the findings of the learned Subordinate Judge are challenged. Of these grounds Nos. 1, 3, 7 and 8 relate to the status of the family. They all in one shape or other raise the plea that the lower Court was wrong in deciding that the family was separate. Ground No. 2 attacks the decision of the Court below to the effect that the present suit for partition of Mauza Sehauna is barred. The other grounds relate to the admissibility and weight of the evidence which was before the Court below.

The main issue we have to consider is whether or not the family to which the parties belong was separate at the time the suit was brought. We have been referred to the evidence of 18 witnesses who were called by the defendants. The learned Counsel for the plaintiffs-appellants does not rely upon the evidence put forward on behalf of his clients. The only evidence of a plaintiffs' witness to which we were referred is the statement of Bakhtawar Singh the 1st defendant, who was examined as plaintiffs' witness No. 3.

The general tenor of the evidence for the defendants is to show that for many years Girand Singh or Gend Singh lived separate from his brothers. Many of the defendants' witnesses are men of respectable position, zemindars and mahajans, and the lower Court has treated them as reliable and independent witnesses. Their statements vary to some extent; some of them can testify to longer periods of acquaintance with the history of the family than others, for example the first witness for the defendants is a Kalwar whose age is 80. His memory goes back as far as 56 years before the date of the suit. He deposes to the effect that Girand Singh was separate from his brothers and nothing of any importance was elicited in cross-examination to shake his credit. The 2nd defendants' witness is a Brahman who gives similar evidence. We have also the evidence of the defendants' witness No. 5, a Bania who has had money dealings with the parties. It is true that his evidence relates only to a period of some 15 years before the suit. He was able to prove, however, that that Chaubar Singh, one of the plaintiffs, had executed a mortgage of his own share in favour of this witness whose name is Bhagwandin. The mortgage-deed was put in Court and was proved. Then we have an important witness in Ram Nath D. W. No. 6. He is a Kayasth and is the Sadar Qanungo in the Kheri District. He knew the parties some time ago because the village used to lie in his circle. He speaks of them as living in separate houses and having separate business, that is to say, separate sir cultivation. The eighth witness for the defendants is a Brahman named Baij Nath. He speaks concerning a village called Ghaghpur which was held in mortgage by the defendants, and his evidence was given for the purpose of showing that he had paid rent for lands in his cultivation in that village to the defendant's and never to the plaintiffs. The ninth witness for the defendant's is a Kachhi who gave similar evidence. Khanna Chamar who was called as defendants' witness No. 10 is an old man who has lived in Sehauna for many years. He deposes to having known the family for over 40 years and he swears that Gand Singh or Girand Singh was separate from his brothers. He also deposes that the land of the village was actually divided by the Patwari Mohan Lal some 20 or 22 years before the suit. Mohan Lal has been called as a witness (D. W. No. 13). He deposes definitely to the division of the Sehauna village lands. He swears that he himself made the division some 22 or 23 years before the suit was brought, that a one third share of the village lands was allotted to the plaintiffs while two-thirds was given to the defendants. He swears that even before the actual division of the land was made by fields the parties had been separately collecting their shares of the village income. In one respect his evidence differs from that of Khanna Chamar, for while the latter deposed that papers were drawn up at the time of partition the Patwari's story is that he prepared no partition papers at all. Great stress has also been laid upon the statement made by Mohan Lal to the effect that the parties used to live in the same house. We are not inclined to attach very much importance to this statement, for even from what appears from the statements of other witnesses it seems clear that although the parties resided separately for a long period, they lived at any rate for a considerable time inside the same enclosure. Two witnesses Nos. 14 and 15 depose to mortgages of certain lands made in favour of the defendants and to the payment of rent to the defendants. These witnesses say that the plaintiffs never received any rent of the mortgaged properties. We may pass over the other evidence which is in a similar strain, mentioning only the statement of the defendants' witness No. 18, a Bania named Hazari Sah. His evidence is of considerable importance for it is proved that he has had money dealings with the parties. He deposes that he has known the family all his life and he supports the statements of the other witnesses regarding the separation of Girand Singh or Gend Singh. The witness swore that both the plaintiffs and the defendants had had money dealings with him and he produced his books of account to show that the parties had separate accounts with him. It is hardly necessary to dwell upon the evidence of the defendant Bakhtawar Singh who was examined as a witness for the plaintiff. Bakhtawar supports the case which he set up in his written statement.

It is not to be denied, therefore, that there is a considerable volume of oral testimony to support the case for the defendants and we are not convinced that the Subordinate Judge was wrong in relying upon it. It is not we think correct to say that the evidence is vague and to some extent contradictory. We think on the contrary that it is as good evidence as could reasonably be expected from persons who are not actually members of the family and whose only opportunities of judging of the status of the family was derived from their visits and friendly relations with the parties. But the matter is settled conclusively in our opinion by the documentary evidence in the case.

The defendants put in a large number of documents for the purpose of showing that property had been acquired separately by Fateh Singh, the son of Rup Singh, under various transactions beginning with the year 1887. It is also manifest from the copies of the village papers which were filed that at any rate since the time of the recent Settlement almost 20 years ago, the parties have been recorded as being in possession of separate pattis of Mauza Sehauna, the plaintiffs' patti representing one-third of the entire village. The appellants rely principally upon Exhibit I, which is a certified copy of the wajib-ul-arz of Sehauna prepared in the year 1869. They also rely on a certain copy of the khasra of the village of Sehauna which was prepared in the year 1867. It has been boldly contended on behalf of the appellants that these documents prove conclusively that the family was joint on the dates mentioned, and it is argued that no definite and reliable evidence of a separation since that time having been given, the plaintiffs are entitled to a finding that the whole of the property, both what existed in the year 1869 and what was subsequently acquired, is joint family property. On the other hand the learned Counsel for the respondents also relies upon the wajib-ul-arz just mentioned and contends that it supports the case of the defendants and not the case of the plaintiffs. After hearing the arguments on this point and considering the language of the wajib-ul-arz we are satisfied that it is quite impossible for the plaintiffs-appellants to rely upon that document for the purpose of showing that the family was a joint family in the year 1869. The only possible conclusion to be drawn from the language of the document is the other way. The first section of the wajib-ul-arz relates to the history of the village, and the only statement we need notice in this part of it is one to the effect that from the years 1255 to 1263 Fasli the village was in possession of Rup Singh the father of Fateh Singh who was lambardar at the time of the Settlement, and from a further statement contained in the same part of the wajib-ul-arz it is made clear that both the summary settlements of this village were made with Rup Singh. The appellants rely strongly upon section 11 of the wajib-ul-arz and in particular upon the following passage:—"This village is held as joint undivided zemin-dari and all the co-sharers are joint in mess; no co-sharer has separated up till the present time. All the lands of the village are held jointly and undivided by reason of the mutual good relations (ittifaq) between the parties and because they live together. All the co-sharers are agreed that each of them has a right to have his share made separate according to the entries contained in the khewat. He can do so at any time he pleases and no co-sharer can make any objection." Following upon this statement we have an extract from the khewat, which sets out the names of the co-sharers. First we have the share of Fateh lambardar and his brother Bakhtawar. They are described as having equal shares in a one-third share of the mauza. Gend Singh brother of Rup Singh is shown as being the owner of a one-third share and Meharban is shown as being the owner of the remaining one-third share. In each case the extent of the share is specified in one of the columns of the statement, and it is further to be noticed that the revenue payable in respect of each one-third share is set out in detail. It seems to us, therefore, that it is idle for the appellants to argue upon this document that the family was a joint Hindu family at the time it was prepared. Here we have a plain statement that the parties have agreed to hold the property in definite shares which are specified with all the particularity which is possible, and we have it definitely laid down that at any time a co-sharer pleases he may call for partition, that is, actual division of the village upon the basis of the shares so recorded. Once the members of a joint family have agreed and declared their intention to hold the property in definite shares the family is no longer a joint family at all and we deem it unnecessary to cite any authority for a proposition so well established. It may, of course, be that no actual division of the property takes place, but the result of an agreement or declaration such as we have referred to is that from the time it is made the parties thenceforth hold the property not as joint tenants but as tenants-in-common.

There are other statements in this wajib-ul-arz which support this obvious interpretation. For example, in section 111 of the wajib-ul-arz, which deals with the collection of rents and the payment of revenue, we have a statement that every co-sharer has the right of realizing his portion of the rents from the tenants and that the collection of rents is not the sole prerogative of the lambardar. It seems needless for us to pursue this matter any further. The wajib-ul-arz entirely supports the case for the defendants and can in no way be treated as evidence for the purpose of showing that in the year 1869 this family was a joint family holding joint family property in the proper sense of the term.

With regard to the khassra Exhibit 6 upon which the plaintiffs rely so strongly, all we need say is that it does not appear to us to justify the conclusion that the family was joint. It is true that in the column describing the owners of the various plots of land in the village all the members of the family are mentioned together and there is no statement regarding the definite shares in which the parties hold. We doubt whether in any case it would be necessary for the purpose of the khassra to set out any definition of shares, but after all what really matters are statements contained in the khewat and the wajib-ul-arz, for those are the documents to which regard must be had for the purpose of ascertaining the proprietary rights of the parties. The khewat is the proprietary register and we have already referred to the extract from that document which is set out in the wajib ul-arz and which decides the matter conclusively.

It has already been stated that in the year 1873 Meharban Singh made a gift of his one-third share mentioned in the wajib-ul-arz to the defendant Bakhtawar Singh, and it is in this way that the defendants between them have come to own a two-thirds share of the village. The fact that such a gift was made so long back is, we think, a very strong proof that the family was separate at that time. We have already mentioned that one of the defendants' witnesses—deposed to a mortgage made by the plaintiff Chaubar Singh in his favour. This document is Exhibit A-30 and was executed by Chaubar Singh on the 16th of September 1912. It purports to be a mortgage of Chaubar Singh's own separate share in the village of Sehauna. If anything were needed to settle the matter more conclusively than it has been, we might refer to a document called a tamliknama which is Exhibit A-2. It is proved that this document was executed by Chaubar Singh, Kalka Singh and Khuman Singh, the father of the third and fourth plaintiffs, on the 21st of November 1890. The document was executed for the purpose of securing maintenance to the widow of one Chhattar Singh, who was the brother of Chaubar Singh. It is expressly stated in this document that a one-twelfth share of Mauza Sehauna belonged to the deceased Chhattar Singh and was in his possession. It was further stated that after the death of Chhattar Singh this property came into possession of the executors of the deed. The deed went on to provide for an annuity payable to Chhattar Singh's widow on her executing a deed of release to any claim to the one-twelfth share of the village held by her husband. These documents knock the bottom out of the plaintiffs' case that the family was a joint family up till the time the present suit was brought.

The result is that we have no doubt whatever that the finding of the Subordinate Judge on this issue was perfectly correct. The family is not a joint family and the property in suit is not joint family property, but is proved to have been divided in the ~~house~~ sense that the parties agreed years ago to hold it in definite shares. On this part of the case the appeal must fail. We are satisfied also that the Subordinate Judge was right in finding that the items of property Nos. 2, 3, 4, 5 and 6 specified in List A attached to the plaint are the separate property of the defendants.

There remains only the other point decided by the Court below, namely, that the suit for the partition of Mauza Sehauna is not entertainable by a Civil Court. We think this decision is correct. What appears to have happened in the Revenue Court was this. An application for partition was made by the defendants in which they stated that their share of the village amounted to two-thirds. Notices were issued to the other co-sharers and the present plaintiffs came in and objected that the khewat had been wrongly prepared and that the shares were not correctly stated. The plaintiffs claimed that they were the owners of a one-half share of the village. They asked the Assistant Collector to stay the partition proceedings until they could apply to have the khewat amended. This application was granted and a separate petition was then put in asking that the khewat might be framed in the manner contended for by the plaintiffs. This application was sent for an inquiry to a Naib-Tahsildar, who investigated the matter and reported that the plaintiffs were not entitled to have any correction of the khewat made. His opinion was that the plaintiffs had only a one-third share in the village and he suggested in his report that if the plaintiffs had any case to make out on this ground, they should go to a Civil Court for a declaration of their right. This report was afterwards considered by the Assistant Collector, who agreed with the Naib-Tahsildar and dismissed the application. It so happened that the Assistant Collector who dealt with this application for correction of the khewat was the same officer before whom the partition proceedings were pending. We are unable to entertain the argument that the order of the Assistant Collector disposing of the application for amendment of the khewat can be treated in any way as an order passed under section 111 of the Land Revenue Act requiring the present plaintiffs to go to a Civil Court for the purpose of having their title determined. If no order is made under this last named section by which the question of title is referred for disposal to a Civil Court, the Civil Court has no jurisdiction to entertain any suit for partition. The exclusive right to make the partition is reserved to the Revenue Court. The Court below was right, therefore, in saying that the present suit, so far as it regards the division of Mauza Sehauna, is not entertainable.

The result of all this is that the decision of the Court below is affirmed. The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 6 (e)— Assignment—Contract of service, whether assignable.

A contract of service being a personal contract is not assignable before breach, as the transfer would be of a mere right to sue. [p. 902, col. 2.]

Petition for revision of the decree of the Judge, Small Cause Court, Daryapur, in Civil Suit No. 1035 of 1916, dated the 12th February 1917.

FACTS appear from the following judgment of the lower Court:—

"The facts of the case are that the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 had executed a service bond in favour of defendant No. 3 on 16th May 1913. The defendant No. 1 received Rs 42 thereunder and agreed to serve for 6 months. It was further agreed that in case defendant No. 1 failed to serve, he shall be liable to pay damages at 6 annas per day. The defendant No. 1 served only for 3 months till 16th August 1913. The defendant No. 3, therefore, sold his right under the deed to plaintiff under a deed of assignment dated 20th July 1916. Plaintiff now brings this suit to recover damages Rs. 33-12-0. It is contended for the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 that the suit cannot lie. In view of the case reported as Abu Mahomed v. S. C. Chunder (1). I hold that this suit cannot lie, as defendant No. 3 clearly transferred his mere right to sue, which cannot be transferred under section 6, Transfer of Property Act. It is held in the above cases that such a claim does not fall under the definition of actionable claim. Suit dismissed with costs. Defendants' costs on plaintiff."

Mr. K. V. Deoskar, for the Applicant.

Mr. Atmaram Bhagwant, for the Non-Applicants.

ORDER.—Following Abu Mahomed v. S. C. Chunder (1). I agree with the lower Court that the contract of service was not assignable. The transfer was of a mere right to sue. It was certainly not assignable before the breach, as the contract was a personal one. After the breach the master was entitled to damages only, although the parties have named a fixed rate of damages for each day of absence from work. The petition of revision is, therefore, dismissed with costs. I fix Rs. 5 as Pleader's fee in this Court.

Under a sale-deed executed by the plaintiff in favour of the defendant, a sum of money was left with the defendant for payment to a creditor of the plaintiff who held a mortgage over some other property belonging to the plaintiff. Defendant paid off the mortgage with a sum in excess of that which was left with him. In a suit by the plaintiff to recover a portion of the consideration for the sale which had been left unpaid:

Held, that the defendant could not be allowed to set off the amount paid by him to the plaintiff's creditor in excess of the amount that was left with him, inasmuch as the excess payment was not obligatory upon the defendant. [p. 903, col. 1; p. 904, col. 1.]

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Moradabad.

Mr. Kailas Nath Katju, for The Hon'ble Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru, for the Appellant.

Dr. S. M. Sulaiman, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The point which arises in this appeal is as follows. Certain immoveable property was sold for a considerable sum of money. In the sale-deed the consideration is stated to have been received in a certain way (as per details at the foot of the deed). According to this detail the vendee was to retain a sum of Rs. 8,150 for payment to a certain creditor of the vendors who had a mortgage upon other property belonging to the vendors, and which was no part of the property sold to the vendee. Some delay seems to have taken place in the registration of the deed and as a consequence, the vendee alleges that he did not pay the Rs. 8,150. Eventually when he succeeded in getting the sale-deed registered, he went to the creditor and offered him the Rs. 8,150, which the creditor refused to receive because further interest had in the meantime accrued amounting to the sum of Rs. 749 or thereabouts. The present suit was instituted by the plaintiffs to recover the portion of the purchase-money which they alleged had not been paid. The defendant admitted that a portion of the purchase-money had not been paid but he claimed credit as against the amount that remained unpaid for the sum of Rs. 749 interest, which he alleged he had paid the creditor of the vendors. Both the Courts below held that assuming that the defendant had paid the creditor the extra sum of Rs. 749 for the interest which had accrued, he could not plead this as a set-off against the plaintiffs' claim for the unpaid purchase-money upon the ground that there was no obligation on the vendee to pay any money to the creditor except the Rs. 8,150, which had been left with him by the vendors. In second appeal to this Court it has been urged that the view taken by the Courts below was incorrect and section 70 of the Contract Act is relied upon. That section provides that "where a person lawfully does anything for another person, or delivers anything to him, not intending to do so gratuitously and such other person enjoys the benefit thereof, the latter is bound to make compensation to the former in respect of or to restore the thing so done or delivered." We do not think that this section applies to the circumstances of the present case. It was admitted at the Bar that if the sale-deed had been silent about payment to the creditor of the vendors and that the vendee of his own motion had paid off the creditor, he could not have pleaded such payment as a set-off against the purchase money. We think that exactly the same reasoning applies to the present case. According to the sale-deed the only sum which the vendee was requested to retain out of the purchase-money and pay to the creditor, was the sum of Rs. 8,150. The payment of the balance was a payment gratuitously made. We have already pointed out that the property mortgaged to secure the sum due to the creditors was no part of the property sold. It may be of course that the plaintiffs have benefited by the payment to the creditor, but this by itself is no sufficient ground to entitle the defendant to set it off against the plaintiffs' claim. We dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 47, O. XXI, rr. 58, 63—Execution—Attachment—Objection by stranger, dismissal of, on ground that he was party to suit—Appeal, whether lies—Suit, regular, maintainability of.

Where in execution of a decree a person who claims that he was not a party to the suit prefers an objection to the attachment of certain property in the capacity of a stranger to the suit and the objection is dismissed on the ground that he was a party to the suit, no appeal lies against the order dismissing the objection but it is open to the objector to file a regular civil suit to establish his right to the property attached. [p. 905, col. 1]

In such cases the test is whether the claim as laid by the objector is adverse to the claims of the real judgment-debtor, and an objector claiming under a paramount title is not deprived of his ordinary remedy of a regular suit merely because his objection is dismissed on the ground that he is held to be a party to the suit. Appeal against the decree of the Divisional Judge, Nagpur Division, in Civil Appeal No. 132 of 1916, decided on 16th April 1917, arising out of Civil Suit No. 55 of 1915, decided by the Additional Sub Judge, Kamptee, on the 26th September 1916.

Messrs. M. V. Joshi and V. V. Chetale, for the Appellant.

The Hon'ble Sir B. K. Bose and Messrs. V. Bose and Eraksha, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Appeal by the defendant. The facts out of which this appeal arises are briefly these. The defendant in 1907 filed a suit in the Court of Small Causes, Bombay, for the price of goods sold, the defendant in the suit being described as Mannalal Ramchandra residing in Bombay. An ex parte decree for Rs. 1,710-6-0 was passed. In execution the judgment debtor was arrested and imprisoned, and then released as his subsistence allowance was not paid. The Bombay decree was transferred for execution to the Court of the District Judge, Nagpur, and the jewelry of the present plaintiff-respondent Manji son of Diparam was attached. He lodged an objection under rule 58, Order XXI of the 1st Schedule to the Civil Procedure Code, on the ground that he was not a party to the suit and that the jewelry was his. The Additional District Judge dismissed the objection, holding that the objector was a party to the suit. The objection was dismissed as the executing Court held that the objector was a party to the suit, since the debtor in the suit was a firm of which the objector and his brother Ramchandra were the partners. The respondent has brought the present suit to recover from the decree-holder the money which he paid in satisfaction of the decree to get his jewelry released from attachment. The learned Sub-Judge held that the respondent was not a party to the suit, the person against whom the decree had been passed being his brother Ramchandra in his individual capacity, and decreed the respondent's claim. In appeal the learned District Judge upheld the decree, taking the same view as to the facts. It was also contended in first appeal that the suit was barred by the rule of res judicata, it having been decided in the execution proceedings that the respondent was a party to the suit and that the remedy of the objector was by way of appeal from that decision. The learned Divisional Judge held that the dismissal of the objection was not a decision under section 47, Civil Procedure Code, of a question arising between parties to the suit, and that a separate suit lay under rule 63 of Order XXI. The first ground of appeal to this Court is that the executing Court having held that the respondent was a party to the suit, that finding, not having been appealed against is conclusive. It is argued that the executing Court was bound to determine whether or not the objector was a party to the suit, and its decision that he was such a party is a decision that the question was one between the parties to the suit within the meaning of section 47, and not having been appealed against is a final decision.

I am of opinion that the view taken by the Divisional Judge is correct. There is no reported case exactly on all fours, but in Upendra Nath Kalamuri v. Kusum Kumari Dasi (1) it was held that an objection made by a shebait of a deity, against whom a decree had been passed as shebait, that the property attached was his private property, was not an objection by a party to the suit as such within the meaning of section 47, and an appeal did not lie against the order on the objection. If the same individual can claim to be regarded as having two capacities in one of which he was not a party to the suit, a fortiori a person who claims that he was not a party to the suit can make an objection in the capacity of a stranger to the suit. The test is laid down at page 450* of the case cited, and is whether the claim laid by the objector is adverse to the claims of the real judgment debtor. The nature of the proceedings is to be judged by the claim of the objector, and an objector claiming under a paramount title is not deprived of his ordinary remedy merely because his objection is dismissed on the ground that he is held to be a party to the suit.

The second ground of appeal calls in question the concurrent finding of both the lower Courts that the decree was against Ramchandra individually. This appears to be a finding of fact, binding on this Court. It is argued by the learned Advocate for the appellant that the interpretation of a decree is a question of law. In any case I am of opinion after studying the record that the decision of the lower Courts is indubitably correct. Whatever the nature of the suit that the appellant should have brought or intended to bring, the suit and decree were actually against the individual Ramchandra.

Partition Act (IV of 1893), ss. 2, 3—Partition, suit for—Defendant claiming to exercise right of purchase—Withdrawal of suit, application for, whether can be allowed—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXIII, r. 1.

In a suit for partition of a house the plaintiff stated that the partition of the house by metes and bounds would spoil the house altogether and asked the Court under section 2 of the Partition Act to order a sale of the house. The defendant claimed to exercise his right under section 3 of the Act to buy the plaintiff's share at a valuation to be fixed by the Court. The Court proceeded to cause a valuation of the house to be made and after it had fixed the valuation of the plaintiff's share, the latter filed an application for leave to withdraw the suit with liberty to bring a fresh suit, which was dismissed:

Held, that the application having been made at a time when matters had reached a stage at which the defendant was entitled to the benefit of the claim which he had put forward under section 3 of the Partition Act, the Court exercised a sound discretion in refusing to allow the application. [p. 406, col. 2.]

First appeal from a decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Meerut.

Dr. Surendra Nath Sen (with him Mr. B. E. O'Connor), for the Appellants.

The Hon'ble Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru and Mr. Girdhari Lal Agarwala, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The appellants in this Court were the plaintiffs in a suit for partition. They owned between them 8-19ths of a certain house. The defendant owned the remaining 1-19th share. In their plaint at paragraph 4 the plaintiffs stated that, regard being

had to its accommodation, the partition of the house in suit would spoil the house altogether so that it would not "at all remain comfortable for residential purposes." Hence the plaintiffs asked the Court under section 2 of the Partition Act (IV of 1893) to order a sale of the house. In reply the defendant raised alternative pleas. In the first place he alleged that a partition of the house by metes and bounds could be effected to the mutual convenience of the parties, provided it were effected in a certain way. In the alternative he pleaded that, if the Court held that the house could not reasonably or conveniently be partitioned and was prepared to accept the plaintiffs' prayer for an auction-sale, then the defendant claimed to exercise his right under section 3 of the same Act to buy the plaintiffs' share at a valuation. At a later stage it is quite clear that the defendant was prepared to withdraw, and did withdraw, his objection to the plaintiffs' allegation that the house could not conveniently be partitioned. He elected to abide by his alternative claim to purchase at a valuation to be fixed by the Court. The Court proceeded accordingly to cause a valuation to be made, obtained a report from Commissioners, heard objections to that report and fixed the value of the plaintiffs' share at Rs. 6,000. It has framed its decree accordingly, permitting the defendant to purchase at this price. In the memorandum of appeal before us it is contended, firstly, that the Court below has misinterpreted sections 2 and 3 of the Partition Act. We think that on the contrary the Court below has properly applied those sections according to their plain meaning. The suggestion that the Court could not legally take the action which it did, without first taking evidence and recording an affirmative finding to the effect that the house could not conveniently be partitioned and that its sale by auction would be more beneficial to the share-holders, comes with an ill-grace from the plaintiffs-appellants. They are, as a matter of fact, trying to make it a grievance that the Court accepted their own allegations of fact to be correct. Moreover, as we have already pointed out, the defendant in a subsequent pleading had virtually accepted the same position. Finally it has been urged upon us that, at a later stage of the trial, when the plaintiffs discovered what the result of the proceedings was likely to be, they asked permission of the Court to withdraw from their suit, with leave to bring a fresh suit, and that this request was refused. Under the circumstances the Court below exercised a sound discretion in refusing to allow this application. Matters had reached a stage at which the defendant was entitled to the benefit of the claim which he had put forward under section 3 of the Partition Act, and in any case the application for withdrawal filed by the plaintiffs does not satisfy the conditions laid down by Order XXIII of the Code of Civil Procedure. In the memorandum of appeal before us there is no definite plea that the finding of the Court below, fixing the value of the plaintiffs' share at Rs. 6,000, is incorrect. Even if we can understand the paragraph of the memorandum of appeal before us as suggesting such a plea, it seems to us that the finding of the Court below is in accordance with the weight of the evidence. The result is that this appeal fails and we dismiss it with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. VI, r. 17, O. XXIII, r. 1—Amendment of plaint—Withdrawal of suit—Appeal, second—Delay in making application, effect of.

Plaintiff brought a suit for a declaration that a certain sale-deed executed by his father was a bogus transaction. At a later stage the plaint was amended so as to include a claim for possession of the property sold. Both the trial Court and the Court of first appeal held that consideration had passed for the sale and dismissed the suit. In second appeal it was sought to impeach the sale on the ground that it was not for antecedent debts or for legal necessity and was, therefore, not binding on the plaintiff.

SATISH MOHINI DEBYA v. PABNA BANK, LIMITED.

Held, that at such a late stage of the proceedings the plaintiff could not be allowed either to amend his pleadings or to withdraw from the suit with liberty to bring a fresh suit.

Appeal against the decree of the Special Additional District Judge, Akola, dated the 27th April 1917.

Mr. V. V. Chitale, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—This second appeal arises out of a suit for a declaration that a sale-deed dated the 5th December 1910 executed by the plaintiff's father Parashram in favour of the defendant's father was a bogus transaction. At a later stage the plaint was amended so as to include a claim for possession of a half share of the property sold. It may be noted that in a previous litigation between the defendant's father and the plaintiff's uncle Krishna it has been decided that Parashram had only a right to convey a half share in the field. Now both the Courts below have held that the transaction in favour of the defendant's father was not a bogus transaction and that there was consideration for the sale. The suit has, therefore, been dismissed.

In second appeal it is contended that the sale by the father was not for an antecedent debt nor for legal necessity. This is a point which the plaintiff never raised in the Courts below. Having regard to the fact that the plaintiff originally came into Court with a relief for a declaration based upon a particular ground, it is not competent to him now to insist upon the invalidity of the sale-deed upon grounds not raised before. There is scarcely any suggestion that the property was joint ancestral property in which the plaintiff had a right by birth. After four years of litigation I cannot allow the plaintiff either to amend his pleadings or to withdraw from the suit with liberty to bring a fresh suit. It is argued that recent decisions have pointed out that a father has no power to sell ancestral family property except for legal necessity or for what is strictly an antecedent debt. The Privy Council decisions cite with approval the Full Bench ruling of the Allahabad High Court in Chandradeo Singh v. Mata Prasad (1), a case which was followed in 1913 by the Judicial Commissioner in Hira Ram v. Udhe Ram (2). I am, therefore, unable to accede to the prayer that either the pleadings should be allowed to be amended or that the plaintiff should be given liberty to bring a fresh suit.

The appeal is, therefore, dismissed. There will be no order for costs, as the respondent appears in person.

A mortgage decree cannot be executed against some of the owners of the equity of redemption [p. 908, col. 1.]

After the final decree in a mortgage suit had been set aside in appeal as against some of the defendants and the case as against them was ordered to be retried, the decree-holders applied for execution of the decree as against the other defendants, but the executing Court, declining to issue execution until the liability of the defendants against whom the decree had been set aside was finally settled, made an order striking off the execution case for the present:

Held, that the execution of the decree was stayed by the Court's order striking off the execution case, so that limitation in respect of execution did not begin to run until the liability of the defendants against whom the decree had been set aside was finally settled. [p. 908, cols. 1 & 2.]

FLETCHER, J.—This is an appeal by the representative, the widow, of a deceased

judgment-debtor against the order of the learned first Subordinate Judge of Pabna, dated the 10th July 1916, directing execution to issue in respect of a certain decree. The matter is an extremely simple one if we take the material facts and confine our attention to them. The husband of the appellant was a party to a mortgage in favour of an institution called the Pabna Bank, Limited, which is a financial institution, I am told, constituted of the local lawyers practising at Pabna. That mortgage was dated the 16th June 1908. It is stated that nine days before the mortgage, the husband of the appellant, that is the judgment debtor Basant Kumar Roy, executed a deed of gift of one of the properties in the town of Pabna in favour of his wife, the present applicant. Be that as it may, the Pabna Bank, Limited, instituted in the year 1908 a suit on their mortgage. They obtained a decree on the 15th February 1909, and the order absolute for sale was made on the 25th November of the same year. Subsequently, the defendants Nos. 2, 3 and 4 took further proceedings in the matter. The case came up to the High Court. The decree as against the defendants Nos. 2, 3 and 4 was set aside and the case was ordered to be retried. But the decree and the order absolute for sale as against the other defendants were not interfered with. In the meantime, on the 27th May 1913, an application was made for execution as against the defendants other than the defendants Nos. 2, 3 and 4. It is quite obvious that a mortgage decree cannot be executed against some of the owners of the equity of redemption, and the learned Judge to whom the application for execution was made said that he was not going on with that case until the liability of the defendants Nos. 2, 3 and 4 had been finally settled. This was clearly a proper order. In the result the case was tried against the defendants Nos. 2, 3 and 4. It was decreed on the 6th February 1915 by a preliminary decree and the final decree was passed on the 27th September 1915. Then comes the present application.

The point made is that the decree-holders cannot execute the first decree because it is barred by limitation. That is quite clearly not so. Execution was clearly stayed by the order of the 27th May 1913. The Judge said that he declined to make any order in the execution case until the liability of the defendants Nos. 2, 3 and 4 was finally settled and he struck off, as he stated in his order, the execution case for the present. What could a party do then when the Judge said that until the liability of the defendants Nos. 2, 3, and 4 was settled, he declined to issue execution? As a matter of fact, the learned Judge was quite right. It is quite impossible to execute a decree in a mortgage suit in the way it was suggested. If that is so, then limitation did not begin to run until the liability of the defendants Nos. 2, 3 and 4 was finally settled; and that was done on the 27th September 1915. In that view, the case was clearly within time and no point can possibly be raised as against the present application on the ground of limitation. Dr. Mitter who appears for the appellant did not make a point as to whether the tabular statement did or did not comply with the terms of Order XXI, rule 11, Code of Civil Procedure. That matter seems to be dealt with by the learned Judge of the Court below. If necessary, it is only a matter of amendment and amendment can easily be made. The decree was passed in 1909 against the defendants other than the defendants Nos. 2, 3 and 4 and the decree passed against the defendants Nos. 2, 3 and 4 on the 6th February 1915 was made absolute on the 27th September of the same year. Under and by virtue of those decrees, the mortgagees, the Bank, are entitled to have the property brought to sale and the proceeds dealt with in accordance with the terms thereof. The real point that Dr. Mitter has raised in the present appeal is the question of fraud and various charges of a similar nature made against the Pabna Bank in the Court below. That question obviously cannot be gone into in a matter of this nature. This is an application to execute certain decrees that have been passed and are found to be binding. So long as those decrees remain undisturbed, it is quite clear that it cannot be said that execution ought not to issue because they were obtained by some improper means. Those decrees, as long as they stand, obviously must be treated as decrees binding on the parties, and are liable to be executed. In my opinion, the learned Judge of the Court below came to a correct conclusion when he directed execution to issue in this case. In that view, the present appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs. We assess the hearing fee at one hundred rupees.

RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 11, O. II, r. 2—Res judicata—Former suit dismissed on technical point—Subsequent suit, whether barred.

In order to conclude a plaintiff by a plea of res judicata it is not sufficient to show that there was a former suit between the same parties, for the same matter, upon the same cause of action. It is necessary also to show that there was a decision finally granting or withholding the relief sought. Where a suit is dismissed for misjoinder or multifariousness or because all the necessary parties have not been joined in it or on any other purely technical point, a subsequent suit on the same cause of action is not barred. [p. 910, col. 1.]

Appeal from the decree of the Court of the District Judge, Raipur, dated the 7th March 1917, in Appeal No. 342 of 1916.

The Hon'ble Sir Bipin Krishna Bose, for the Appellant.

Mr. P. S. Kotwal, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff is the Zemin-dar of Gunderdehi and the defendant was a thekadar of Mauza Pinkapar, which is one of the villages in the Zemindari. The defendant held the village, according to the plaintiff, under a lease from the plaintiff's grandfather which expired in 1911. The plaintiff, therefore, sues for possession of the village including sir and khudkast appertaining thereto.

In Suit No. 350 of 1913 the present plaintiff sued for possession of sir and khudkast lands of Pinkapar, alleging that he had already received possession of the rest of the village. The defendant denied in that suit that he had given back possession of the village, and pleaded that the plaintiff could not bring a suit for possession of the sir and khudkast land without ejecting the defendant from the village. The Court held that there was no voluntary surrender of the village by the defendant, though the Court of Wards on behalf of the plaintiff realized rents from the tenants. The following passage from the judgment in Suit No. 350 of 1913 gives the reasons for the dismissal of the suit:—

"As the suit has not been properly framed nor does it include the whole of the claim which the plaintiff is entitled to make in respect of the village and the allegations made by plaintiff have not been established, I find that the plaintiff cannot succeed. His present suit, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs." (Exhibit D.1).

From this judgment there was an appeal but the appeal was withdrawn. The Appellate Court refused to give the plaintiff liberty to bring a fresh suit. (Exhibit D 3).

In second appeal it is now contended that the decree in the previous suit operates as res judicata and that the present suit is barred by Order II, rule 2. The plaintiff, it is urged, should have pressed the appeal with regard to the possession of sir and khudkast as he was entitled to and left it to a future suit to decide whether there was an omission or relinquishment of his claim to the rest of the village, within the meaning of Order II, rule 2. Further it is pointed out that the plaintiff obtained no permission to withdraw from the suit with liberty to bring a fresh suit, that the plaint was not rejected, but the suit was dismissed by a decree. It is also urged that even if the decision of the former Court was erroneous in law, the decree is still binding on the plaintiff.

In Suit No. 350 all the issues were found in favour of the plaintiff except that the Court held that there was no surrender of the village. The Court rightly or wrongly held that the plaintiff was bound to bring a suit for the village as well as the home farm land: in other words, the Court held that there was a defect in the frame of the suit, and hence the suit as framed was dismissed.

Cases were cited before me to show that the cause of action in the suits is identical. I will assume this in favour of the appellant throughout this judgment.

In Saikappa Chetti v. Rani Kulandapuri Nachiyar (1) it was laid down: "To conclude a plaintiff by a plea of res judicata it is not sufficient to show that there was a former suit between the same parties for the same matter upon the same cause of action. It is necessary also to show that there was a decision finally granting or withholding the relief sought." There was no final grant or withholding of the relief sought. The suit as framed was held to be not maintainable.

Neill, J. C., in Ganpat Rao v. Doma Patel (2) speaking of the rule of res judicata says: "It is sound law when a suit has been dismissed for misjoinder or multifariousness or because all the proper parties have not been joined in it or when it has been dismissed on a purely technical point, a subsequent suit is not barred."

The decree read by itself is an unconditional dismissal of the suit, but we are entitled to look at the judgment to see what was actually decided. In the view taken in the previous suit the frame of the suit prevented its determination on the merits of the case. To use the words of Phear, J., in Futteh Singh v. Musammat Luchmee Koor (3), "The fact that the Court has in form passed a decree dismissing the suit, does not alter the character of the determination."

The decree, even if erroneous, must be held to be binding upon the plaintiff, as contended for the appellant; the appeal was withdrawn and no liberty to bring a fresh suit was given.

The appellate proceedings have not, however, placed the plaintiff in a worse position than he was under the decree of the first Court. It is true he might have pressed the appeal for his claim for home farm land relinquishing his claim to the rest of the village, but this he was not bound to do, if he was prepared to take the risk of a different construction being put upon the decree of the first Court. The decree, I have now held, does not operate as res judicata.

The case is analogous to the case when a suit for a purely declaratory decree is dismissed on the ground that consequential relief should have been asked for. There are a number of cases where it has been held that a subsequent suit for possession is not barred either by section 11 or by Order II, rule 2. The difficulty has been felt mainly with reference to the application of section 43 of the Code of 1882. All the cases cited are in favour of the plaintiff and none in favour of the defendant. In L. Rooke v. Dosai Sonar (4) Stevens, J. C., followed the cases mentioned in Jibunti Nath Khan v. Shib Nath Chuckerbutty (5), Komola Kaminy Debia v. Loke Nath Kur (6), Ram Sewak Singh v. Nakched Singh (7) and Mohan Lal v. Bilaso (8). To these I may add Bhola Singh v. Gurdit Singh (9). I find the weight of authority is distinctly against the appellants' contention. I hold that the suit is not barred either by section 11 or Order XX, rule 2.

The appeal is, therefore, dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Execution of decree—Application for attachment of moveables—Subsequent application for attachment of immoveables, whether in continuation of previous application—Limitation.

On the 26th of August 1916 a decree-holder made an application for execution of a decree for arrears of rent, which he had obtained on the 10th of December 1913, praying for the attachment and sale of the judgment-debtor's moveable properties. Processes were issued accordingly, but as the result of proceedings taken by the judgment-debtor, the attachment of moveables was found to be impracticable. Thereupon on the 22nd February 1917 the decree-holder prayed that he should be permitted to proceed against the judgment-debtor's immoveable properties. Permission was granted and on the 24th February 1917 the decree-holder filed a list of the immoveable properties against which he desired that proceedings should be taken:

Held, that the applications of the 22nd and 24th February 1917 should be regarded and treated as in continuation of the application made on the 26th August 1916 and that, therefore, there was no bar of limitation to the execution sought by the decree-holder. [p. 912, col. 1.]

Where on an application for execution of a decree made in accordance with law, execution cannot be successfully taken against the property specified in the application by reason of causes for which the decree-holder is in no way responsible, he should not be confined to the properties first specified, but it is open to him to ask the Court to proceed against other properties specified in his further supplementary list. JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of certain execution proceedings. It appears that on the 10th December 1913 the decree-holder-appellant obtained a decree for arrears of rent against the judgment-debtor-respondent in this appeal. On the 26th August 1916 the decree-holder made an application for execution, and in the same application prayed for the attachment and sale of the judgment-debtor's moveable properties. Processes were issued accordingly, but as the result of proceedings taken apparently by the judgment-debtor the attachment of moveables was found to be impracticable. Thereupon on the 22nd February 1917 the decree-holder prayed that he should be permitted to proceed against the judgment-debtor's immoveable properties. Permission was granted and on the 24th February 1917, the decree-holder filed a list of the immoveable properties against which he desired that proceedings should be taken.

The application made on the 26th August 1916 was admittedly within time. But the Court of first appeal has held that the applications made on the 22nd and 24th February 1917 were barred by the three years' rule of limitation to be found in Article 6 of Schedule II of the Bengal Tenancy Act. In appeal the decree-holder contends that the applications made on the 22nd and 24th February 1917 should be considered and treated, not as fresh or new applications, but as applications made as parts of and in continuation of the first application rendered necessary by the fact that the Court was unable to give the decree-holder the remedy sought for in the first instance. The judgment debtor-respondent on the other hand cites the Full Bench case of Asgar Ali v. Troilokya Nath Ghose (1), and on the authority of that case contends that the applications of the 22nd and 24th February 1917 should be looked upon as in the nature of amendments of the original application and, therefore, as amendments which could not be made after the original application had been admitted and registered. The present case may, however, be distinguished from the Full Bench case in the manner in which the case of Gnanendra Kumar Rai Chowdhury v. Shayama Sunder Jen (2), to the decision of which I was myself a party, was distinguished. In this case, as in that case, the application of the 26th August 1916 was one made in accordance with law. In this case, as in that case, by reason of causes for which the decree-holder was in no way responsible, execution could not be successfully taken against the properties first specified. As in that case, we are of opinion that in such a case the decree-holder should not be confined to the properties first specified and it was open to him to ask the Court to proceed against the properties specified in his further and supplementary list. For the reasons given, therefore, we are of opinion that the applications of the 22nd and 24th February 1917 should be regarded and treated as in continuation of the application made on the 26th August 1916, and that there is no bar of limitation to the execution sought by the decree-holder.

In this view of the case we need not consider the question, namely, whether by reason of the judgment-debtor's conduct he has not brought himself within the exception to Article 6 of the 3rd Schedule of the Bengal Tenancy Act. That is a question which we leave open.

This appeal is accordingly decreed with costs. We assess the hearing fee at two gold mohurs.

JUDGMENT.—The dispute in this case relates to the village Madarpur Bahadur Singh, which formed part of the estate belonging to Sarabjit Singh. Sarabjit Singh was a taluqdar whose father was entered at No. 41 in List I and No. 7 in List II, appended to Act I of 1869. He had a wife, Musammāt Umrāi Kunwar, who is defendant No. 1, and 4 daughters, Musammāt Balraja, Musammāt Sheoraja, Musammāt Dilaram and Musammāt Sirtaja. Musammāt Balraja was a widow. Musammāt Sheoraja had died, leaving two sons, Rudra Pratap Singh and Dasrath Lal, who are the plaintiffs-appellants. Musammāt Dilaram died, leaving a son, Piare Lal, who is defendant No. 2. Musammāt Sirtaja is said to have had no issue.

On the 10th February 1904 Sarabjit Singh executed a Will by which he gave to his wife, Musammāt Umrāi Kunwar, a life-estate in all the immoveable property belonging to him without any power of alienation, with a vested remainder in favour of Piare Lal, the son of the deceased daughter Musammāt Dilaram, whom he had brought up as his own son, subject to a devise in favour of the present plaintiffs of the village Madarpur Bahadur Singh for their maintenance without any power of alienation, free from the payment of Government revenue, generation after generation, so long as their line of descendants continued to exist, and an annuity of Rs. 300 per year to Musammāt Balraja for her life and of Rs. 1,000 per annum to Musammāt Sirtaja and her male descend.

RUDRA PRATAP SINGH v. UMRAI KUNWAR.

ants, so long as the male line of the descendants did not become extinct, and thereafter of Rs. 100 per annum to her female line. The Will recited a previous gift of some property in favour of Musammatt Jafri Begam, his concubine, and the grant of a guzara to her son, Kirat Singh, and further stated that all the moveable property and effects in the house, which Musammatt Jafri Begam occupied, were hers and that none of his successors shall have any power to interfere with her possession of the same.

Sarabjit Singh died on the 6th March 1916. Musammatt Umrai Kunwar got mutation of names effected in her favour on his death in respect of the entire estate, but subsequently surrendered her life-estate in favour of Piare Lal, the remainderman mentioned in the Will, by a document which she executed in his favour on the 17th May 1917.

The plaintiffs state that under the aforesaid Will they became entitled to the possession of the village Madarpur Bahadur Singh on the death of Sarabjit Singh; but the defendants contend that the Will gave no right to the plaintiffs to claim the said village, so long as Musammatt Umrai Kunwar was alive. The Court below accepted the contention of the defendants and dismissed the claim.

The interpretation put by the Court below on the Will is not, however, justified by its terms. Excluding the preamble, the operative part of the Will is divided into two paragraphs, the first of which states that by virtue of that Will the testator cancelled his previous Will of the 26th October 1895, and the second proceeds to make a devise of a life-estate in favour of Musammatt Umrai Kunwar without any power of alienation and a vested remainder in favour of Piare Lal on her death, subject to certain bequests which were described in four sub paragraphs or clauses. By one of these clauses the village Madarpur Bahadur Singh was given to the present plaintiffs and their descendants for their maintenance without any power of alienation. By the other clauses annuities were provided for Musammatt Balraja and Musammatt Sirtaja and the descendants of the latter and a provision made for the exclusion of certain property or rights previously given to Musammatt Jafri Begam and her son, Kirat Singh, and the effects or goods lying in the house occupied by Musammatt Jafri Begam, from the operation of the Will in favour of Musammatt Umrai Kunwar and Piare Lal. Each of these clauses restricts or controls the main bequests made by the second paragraph of the Will in favour of Musammatt Umrai Kunwar and Piare Lal. The contention of the learned Counsel for the defendants-respondents that these clauses restrict and control only the vesting of the estate in favour of Piare Lal on the death of Musammatt Umrai Kunwar and do not affect the intermediate life-estate granted to Musammatt Umrai Kunwar, is on the face of the document entirely untenable. So far as Piare Lal is concerned, no immediate bequest was made in his favour, because as the testator says in his Will and Musammatt Umrai Kunwar affirms in her deed of surrender, Piare Lal was brought up and maintained by the testator as his own son and Musammatt Umrai Kunwar was expected to look after him after his death. The construction adopted by the learned Subordinate Judge is entirely unnatural, and does not carry out the intention of the testator, which was to provide immediate means for the maintenance of the plaintiffs and his surviving daughters after his death.

The transfer effected by Musammatt Umrai Kunwar of her life-interest in favour of the remainderman, moreover, operates as a surrender, accelerating the devolution in favour of the latter [Behari Lal v. Madho Lal Ahir Gayawal (1)].

We allow the appeal accordingly and decree the claim of the plaintiffs for possession and mesne profits to be ascertained hereafter with costs here and hitherto and direct that the amount of the said mesne profits shall be determined by the Court below in the manner provided by Order XX, rule 13 (c), of the Code of Civil Procedure. The defendants respondents shall bear their own costs throughout.

Appeal allowed.

The word "ejectment" in section 3 (2) of the Malabar Compensation for Tenants' Improvements Act includes "redemption" or recovery of possession of the land mortgaged. [p. 914, col. 2.]

The distinction between preliminary and final decrees made in rules 7 and 8 of Order XXXIV, Civil Procedure Code, is unknown to decrees passed under section 6 (1) of the Malabar Compensation for Tenants' Improvements Act. The latter Act provides only for one decree which is a decree in ejectment, though that decree is liable to be revised by orders passed by the executing Court under section 6 (3) of the Act. [p. 915, col. 2; p. 916, col. 1.]

An application for enhancement of the value of improvements owing to further improvements effected by the defendant after the date of the decree cannot be treated as an application for a final decree, nor can the order thereon be deemed to be the final decree in the suit. An order for re-valuation of improvements can only be passed by the executing Court. [p. 915, col. 2; p. 916, col. 1.]

Where an appeal was preferred against an order for re-valuation of improvements which was followed by the passing of what was called a final decree and the appeal was dismissed on the ground that no appeal lay:

Held, (1) that the application of the decree-holder, though styled as one for the passing of a final decree, was, in substance, one for the execution of the decree already passed; [p. 916, col. 2.]

(2) that the Court should have ordered the amendment of the application as one in execution and passed its order thereon, in which case the order for re-valuation would fall under section 47, Civil Procedure Code, and be appealable; [p. 917, col. 1.]

(3) that the Appellate Court could make the amendment itself and pass the necessary orders after the amendment. [p. 917, col. 1.]

The appeal and the memorandum of objections coming on for hearing on 26th February 1918 and the case having stood over to this day for consideration, the Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—This is an appeal by two of the judgment debtors, mortgagees and tenants under the Malabar Compensation for Tenants' Improvements Act, the respondent being the mortgagor landlord who brought this suit for ejectment and obtained a decree. Under section 3, clause (2) of the Malabar Compensation for Tenants' Improvements Act (Madras Act I of 1900) "ejectment" includes "redemption" or recovery of possession of the land mortgaged. The revised decree in the suit passed by the Subordinate Judge (the lower Appellate Court) on the 14th February 1913 was to the following effect: that on plaintiff's depositing into Court on or before the 14th day of August 1913 the amount shown above as due to various defendants less the arrears of rent and costs and future rent till the date of deposit, the defendants do surrender the plaint properties with all improvements thereon and if such payment is not made on or before the said 14th August 1913 the property shall be sold. This decree seems to have been substantially confirmed by the High Court on 9th February 1915. The decree expressly mentions the value of improvements due to the respective defendants as required by section 6, clause (1), of the Malabar Compensation for Tenants' Improvements Act and does not order the taking of any accounts either as regards the amount which may be found due under the mortgage on the date fixed for redemption as in an ordinary mortgage decree or as regards improvements. The

NANU NAIR V. KUNDAN ASHTAMURTHI.

Malabar Compensation for Tenants' Improvements Act was passed in 1900 when the old Civil Procedure Code of 1882 was in force. Under that Code (according to the law as finally settled in this Court) only one decree is passed in an ordinary mortgage suit for redemption in districts even other than the Malabar District; see Mallikarjunadu v. Lingamurti Pantulu (1). The Malabar Compensation Act by section 6, clause (1), treated a suit for redemption in Malabar as a suit in ejectment and provided for only one decree which, of course, is a decree in ejectment. As regards decrees in ejectment there is no question of preliminary decrees and final decrees. As regards decrees for redemption passed in other districts under the Transfer of Property Act and the old Civil Procedure Code, there was only an order absolute for foreclosure or for sale provided for, after the simple decree for redemption was passed. There was under these Acts no preliminary decree and no final decree as distinguished from the simple decree for redemption, which was dated on the day that the judgment was pronounced in the suit. The Malabar Compensation Act, however, made departures from the Transfer of Property Act and the old Civil Procedure Code as regards the procedure in a suit for ejectment brought against tenants [which term includes mortgagees, see section 3, clause (1)], by (1) providing in sub-sections 3 and 4 of section 6 for the passing of an order as to re-valuation of improvements even after decree and before ejectment by an order of Court executing the decree, (2) by providing for the varying of the decree (originally passed) in accordance with the said order of the Court executing the decree re-valuing the improvements, (3) by providing that the matters relating to re-valuation and to variation of the decree in accordance with such a re-valuation shall be deemed to be questions relating to the execution of the decree within the meaning of clause (1) of section 244 of the old Code of Civil Procedure and (4) by not providing for the passing of an order for sale either nisi or absolute in such suits (see repealed sections 88, 89, 92 and 93 of the Transfer of Property Act). The new Civil Procedure Code of 1908 by Order XXXIV, rule 7, (see marginal note) styled the only decree passed in a suit for redemption in other districts under the old Code as a preliminary decree and provided newly by Order XXXIV, rule 8, for the passing of a final decree in a redemption suit instead of the order absolute for sale provided for in the Transfer of Property Act, the provisions in which as regards decrees in mortgage suits were repealed by the new Civil Procedure Code. The new Civil Procedure Code, however, makes no reference to the Malabar Compensation Act, section 6, under which decrees in suits against mortgagees of Malabar are directed to be passed in a particular form which makes no provision for the two kinds of decrees, "preliminary" and "final". The new Civil Procedure Code in section 4, clause (1), says: "In the absence of any specific provision to the contrary, nothing in this Code shall be deemed to limit or otherwise affect any special or local law now in force or any special jurisdiction or power conferred or any special form or procedure prescribed by or under any other law for the time being in force." It is thus clear that notwithstanding the passing of the new Civil Procedure Code, as far as suits in Malabar against mortgagees are concerned, there could be only one decree passed in a suit, under section 6, clause (1) of the Malabar Compensation for Tenants' Improvements Act, and not two decrees, "preliminary" and "final". Provisions like directions for sale in default, allowing time to pay moneys declared as due and so on, not inconsistent with the Improvements Act and directed or allowed by the new Civil Procedure Code to be mentioned in decrees for redemption or ejectment, can, of course, be mentioned in decrees passed in suits falling under the Compensation Act also.

I am, therefore, of opinion that the decree passed in the present suit, though passed in 1913 after the new Civil Procedure Code came into force, was not a preliminary decree under Order XXXIV, rule 7, of the new Civil Procedure Code, to be followed by a final decree under rule 8, but that it is only the one decree which has to be passed under section 6, clause (1), of the Malabar Compensation Act, though this one decree is liable to be revised by orders passed by the executing Court under section 6, clause 3.

I shall now proceed to set out the several irregularities which have been committed in this case. The plaintiff in ejectment (the decree-holder), instead of treating this decree as the only decree in ejectment, treated it as a preliminary decree passed under the Civil Procedure Code and applied under Order XXXIV, rule 8, on 31st July 1915, to the District Munsif for a final decree for redemption. On the 27th August 1915 the contesting defendants appeared and without objecting to the petition to pass a final decree as one not provided for by law contended that the value of improvements mentioned in the decree should be enhanced before they are ejected, and then on the 10th September 1915 filed a statement showing the further improvements made by them between 1913 and 1915. It is clear from section 6, clause 3 of the Act, that it is only the Court executing the decree that can re-value the improvements. Unless the application to pass a final decree is treated as an execution application, the Court considering that application cannot be called a Court "executing the decree" and hence had no jurisdiction to pass orders, as regards the re-valuation of improvements. The District Munsif, however, (neither party objecting) appointed a Commissioner to re-value the improvements, and the Commissioner's report made in April 1916 and the objections thereto were considered by the District Munsif on 30th October 1916, when he pronounced a partial judgment dealing with most of the matters argued before him in view to pass a final decree as prayed for by the plaintiff. At the end of that judgment of 30th October 1916, he allowed the plaintiff a week's time to deposit the balance payable by him for the value of the excess improvements and adjourned the matter for one week, that is, to the 6th November 1916 in order to complete his judgment before passing the final decree in accordance with such judgment, as some minor questions (as to costs, as to the rights to gather the second crops on some lands, the liability for payment of revenue, etc.) had still to be disposed of. Then on the 6th November 1916 he completed his judgment by expressing his opinions on these points also. In accordance with this judgment of 6th November 1916 a formal final decree, dated the same day, 6th November 1916, seems to have been drawn up in the Munsif's Court.

Against the order of the District Munsif of 6th November 1916 increasing the value of improvements, an appeal was filed to the Sub Court at Palghat. The temporary Subordinate Judge dismissed the appeal, on a preliminary objection taken by the respondent to the effect that the appeal was misconceived, because the appeal was filed not against the final decree but against the order passed on an interlocutory petition made by the judgment-debtor for the enhancement of the value of improvements, though that interlocutory petition was made as an answer to the decree-holder's petition for the passing of a final decree. The learned Subordinate Judge further held that an application for a final decree is not an application arising in execution of the decree and held, therefore, that no appeal lay under section 47, Civil Procedure Code. I think that no serious notice need be taken of another contention urged before us by Mr. Parameswara Aiyar for the respondent that the appeal ought to have been against the incomplete judgment of 30th October 1916 (and not against the complete order of 6th November 1916).

The appeal before us is against the order of the Subordinate Judge dismissing the appeal to him on the preliminary point above stated. I think that the order having been followed up by the drawing up of a final decree, the technical objection upheld by the lower Appellate Court that the appeal to it was made against the order and not against the final decree and, therefore, incompetent is unsubstantial, the grounds urged in appeal against the order applying of course to the final decree.

Further, on the view which I have expressed above, there being no final decree contemplated by the Malabar Compensation Act, the application of the decree-holder, though styled as one for the passing of the final decree, was in substance one for execution of the decree already passed. As it was, however, not in proper form, the learned District

DURGA CHARAN v. LAKHI NARAIN.

Munsif ought to have directed it to be amended by quoting the proper order and rule applicable and then passed his orders in execution. The order altering the compensation value would, under the Compensation Act, fall within the description of an order passed by the executing Court in execution and would be deemed to have fallen under section 244 of the old Civil Procedure Code if that Code was in force and would, after the present Code came into force, fall under section 47 thereof (see section 8 of the General Clauses Act). Hence an appeal lay against such an order. If the decree is altered in accordance with such order and if the order itself is set aside on appeal, the alteration of the decree is cancelled ipso facto, just as when a preliminary decree in the plaintiff's favour is set aside on appeal and the suit is dismissed, the final decree drawn up pending the appeal loses all its legal effect.

This appeal and the memorandum of objections have, therefore, to be allowed and I would set aside the Sub-Judge's order and remand the case to him with directions to him to order the plaintiff to amend his application for the passing of a final decree as an application in execution (the amendment may be made by filing a separate paper in the proper form prescribed for an execution application), to treat, after such amendment is made, the order of the District Munsif of 6th November 1916 as an order passed by the executing Court for re-valuing the improvements, to treat the appeal and the memorandum of objections filed before him (the Subordinate Judge) as an appeal and as an objection memorandum against that order filed against an order passed under section 47 and to dispose of them in due course according to law. The parties will bear their respective costs in this appeal.

OLDFIELD, J.—I agree.

DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Decree, whether can be set aside in subsequent suit—Pro-note, suit on—Question whether executant signed it as security for other persons, whether can be determined—Appeal by some of several defendants—Co-defendant not made party to appeal—Decree against co-defendant, validity of—Appellate Court, power of, to add parties.

It is not open to a litigant, except on the ground of fraud, to maintain a suit to rescind or nullify a decree passed in a former suit to which he was a party and which was tried out by a competent Court. [p. 918, col. 2.]

In a suit on a promissory note the question whether the defendant, executant of the note, signed it by way of security for others cannot be tried or determined, except so far as it affects the question of consideration. [p. 919, col. 1.]

Where some of several defendants appeal from a decree without bringing their co-defendants before the Appellate Court as respondents, the Appellate Court has no jurisdiction to pass any decree against the co-defendants without adding them as parties to the appeal. [p. 919, col. 2.]

An appeal having been preferred by some of the defendants, the Appellate Court set aside the decree of the lower Court as against them and made a new decree against a co-defendant who was not a respondent to the appeal. Thereupon the latter applied for the restoration and re-hearing of the appeal in his presence:

Held, that although no provision of the Civil Procedure Code dealt with such a case, yet the Appellate Court should restore the appeal and re-hear it in the presence of the co-defendant after adding him as a party. [p. 919, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal preferred by Durga Charan Bose, plaintiff in Suit No. 398 of 1915, which suit has been dismissed by the District Judge. We are also asked to revise the decree and order of the Additional District Judge in Appeal No. 291 of 1913 arising out of Suit No. 12 of 1912 in which Durga Charan Bose was defendant No. 9.

The facts of the case are somewhat peculiar. There was a dispute between Lakhi Narain Bera and Hari Krista Bera on the one side and Gopal Chandra Jana of Nadabhanga and others on the other over certain paddy, which resulted in proceedings under section 107 and section 145, Criminal Procedure Code. The matter was referred to the arbitration of Pramada Nath Dutt, Muktear of the Beras, and Durga Charan Bose, the present appellant, the Muktear of the opposite party. Of the merits of that dispute we have no means of judging, nor is it necessary for the present purpose to discuss them. It is sufficient to say that on 19th January 1910 Durga Charan Bose executed a promissory note for Rs. 250 in favour of the Beras payable on demand. On that promissory note the Beras instituted Suit No. 12 of 1912 against Gopal Chandra Jana and 7 others, defendants Nos. 1 to 8, and Durga Charan Bose, defendant No. 9. The suit came on for hearing before the Munsif. Defendants Nos. 3 and 8 not being served, the suit was dismissed as against them. Defendants Nos. 1, 2, 4, 5, 6 and 7 denied all knowledge of the promissory note, pleaded that it was void for want of consideration, and raised other defences. Durga Charan Bose contended that there was no consideration for the note and that, if there was, it had in fact been satisfied. It may be noted that he no longer puts forward these pleas but admits his liability on the promissory note. The Munsif found that the promissory note was executed by Durga Charan Bose for good consideration but really as a surety for defendants Nos. 1 to 8 who owed certain moneys to the Beras. He accordingly on 31st March 1913 passed a decree against all the defendants (other than defendants Nos. 3 and 8 who were not served) and directed that the decretal amount should be realised first from the properties, or persons, or both, of defendants Nos. 1, 2, 4, 5, 6 and 7 only, and then the balance, if necessary, from the properties of the defendant No. 9 (Durga Charan Bose).

Against this decree the defendants Nos. 1, 2, 4, 5, 6 and 7 appealed making the Beras, the plaintiffs, respondents, but not Durga Charan Bose their co-defendant. The appeal was heard by the Additional District Judge, Mr. Duval, on 28th February 1914. Before him the plaintiffs' Pleader admitted that on the pleadings there was no cause of action against defendants Nos. 1 to 8, whatever rights defendant No. 9 might have against them. The learned Additional District Judge accordingly set aside the decree against defendants Nos. 1, 2, 4, 5, 6 and 7 but added (and those words appear also in his decree) "a decree will be given against the defendant No. 9 only."

On 20th March, 1914 Durga Charan Bose applied for the restoration of the appeal. After hearing the parties the Additional District Judge on 24th June 1914 passed the following order:—"The decree in the lower Court was against defendants Nos. 1 to 7" (it was not as a fact against defendant No. 3) "and defendant No. 9 and it was acquiesced in by defendant No. 9. I do not see how I can permit defendant No. 9 to re-argue the appeal. I dismiss the application, I find no section under which it can come."

Durga Charan Bose took no further steps of any kind until 24th April 1915, when he filed the suit out of which the present appeal arises (Suit No. 298 of 1915). In this suit he proceeded only against the Beras, plaintiffs in Suit No. 12 of 1912, and not against his co-defendants in that suit. He prayed for a declaration that the appellate decree of the Additional District Judge above mentioned (money Appeal No. 291 of 1913) was not binding upon him, but fraudulent, illegal, invalid, inoperative, null and void and "dictum" (whatever that may mean); that the Additional District Judge had no jurisdiction to pass such a decree; and that the said decree was "non-executable" against him. The Munsif granted him a decree, but that has been reversed by the District Judge, Mr. Cuming, and the plaintiffs' suit dismissed. We think that the decision of the learned District Judge is correct. It is not open to a litigant, except on the ground of fraud, to maintain a second suit to rescind or nullify the decree in a former suit to which he was a party and which was tried out by a competent Court. The case of Balwant

DURGA CHARAN V. LAKHI NARAIN.

Prasad Pande v. Ram Ratan Gir (1) is directly in point. To quote the words of Lord Shaw, "such a procedure is radically incompetent."

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

The matter does not, however, end there. We are asked to revise the decrees in Suit No. 12 of 1912, and this we have power to do under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code. In this suit, a series of mistakes has been committed, the last of which, we regret to see, was committed in this Court in the issue of this Rule. The Rule was directed to issue on the "8 defendants-respondents." What was obviously intended was to issue a Rule on the two plaintiffs, the Beras, and the six defendants Nos. 1, 2, 4, 5, 6 and 7, against whom the suit had proceeded. The Bera plaintiffs, though not served with the Rule, are before us in the cognate matter of Appeal No. 2010 of 1917 and have no objection to the order which we propose to pass on this Rule. The petitioner Durga Charan Bose is to blame in this matter as he gave in paragraph 11 of his petition the names of the 8 persons who were to be served. They are the persons who were the original defendants Nos. 1 to 8 in Suit No. 12 of 1912. It appears from the record that defendant No. 8 is now dead and his heirs have not been brought on the record. This is, however, of no importance inasmuch as the suit never proceeded against defendants Nos. 3 and 8, and they have no concern with the subsequent proceedings. None of the persons, defendants Nos. 1 to 7, who have been served appear in this Rule.

Turning to the proceedings in the suit it is clear that the plaintiffs, the Beras, sued only on the promissory note. They had, therefore, no cause of action against defendants Nos. 1 to 8 who were no parties to that note. The question whether Durga Charan Bose had signed the promissory note by way of security for the defendants Nos. 1 to 8 could not be tried or determined in this suit, except so far as it affected the question of consideration. Durga Charan Bose alone could be held liable on the promissory note, and the decree of the Munsif making defendants Nos. 1, 2, 4, 5, 6 and 7 liable as principal debtors and Durga Charan Bose liable as a surety only was clearly erroneous. For some extraordinary reason defendants Nos. 1, 2, 4, 5, 6 and 7 in their appeal against this decree did not bring Durga Charan Bose before the Court as a respondent. The learned Additional District Judge, therefore, was correct in setting aside the Munsif's decree against the appellants but had no jurisdiction to pass the decree which he passed, or indeed any decree, against Durga Charan Bose, who was no party to the appeal before him. We think that the learned Additional District Judge was in error in refusing to restore the appeal and re-hear it in the presence of Durga Charan Bose after adding him as a party. It is true that no section of the Civil Procedure Code deals with such a case but then it was never contemplated that a Court would deal with a person, who was no party to the proceeding before it, as if he were a party properly added and properly served. The learned Additional District Judge would have been in order if in allowing the appeal of defendants Nos. 1, 2, 4, 5, 6 and 7 he had said nothing about defendant No. 9. In that case the decree of the Munsif against defendant No. 9 would have stood. But as it was, he made the decree against him a decree of the Appellate Court which he had no jurisdiction to do. There are two courses open to us. We may set aside the decree of the Additional District Judge and remand the appeal for re-hearing in the presence of Durga Charan Bose, or we may now pass such final decree in Suit No. 12 of 1912 as in our opinion ought to have been passed by the Courts below. As we entertain no manner of doubt as to what the decree should be, we adopt the latter course.

We set aside the decrees of both the Courts and pass a decree in favour of the plaintiffs against defendant No. 9, Durga Charan Bose, for Rs. 307-8-0 and costs, and interest at six per cent. per annum from 31st March 1913 until realization. The suit is dismissed against defendants Nos. 3 and 8, who were not served, without costs, and against defendants Nos. 1, 2, 4, 5, 6 and 7 with costs in both the lower Courts and interest on such costs at six per cent. per annum until realization.

We make no order as to costs of this Rule, as the plaintiffs have incurred no additional costs in respect of it and the defendants Nos. 1 to 7 have not appeared.

This decree will not affect the rights, if any, which Durga Charan Bose may have against defendants Nos. 1 to 8 and which, as we have said, could not be investigated in this suit.

Appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Unao, dated the 31st March 1916.

The Hon'ble Pandit Gokaran Nath Misra and Sayed Zahur Ahmad, for the Appellant.

Mr. A. P. Sen, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for the partition of a two-thirds share out of certain joint properties. The relationship between the parties will appear from the pedigree given by the learned Subordinate Judge in his judgment. It is not disputed that the parties were living jointly till the date of the suit. The main contention of the defendant-appellant is that the properties, the partition of which was decreed by the Court below, were impartible and belonged exclusively to the defendant-appellant.

The learned Subordinate Judge found that the said properties were partible and belonged to the joint family, of which the plaintiffs and the defendant were members. The allegation of impartibility rests on a very slender foundation. The defendant-appellant alleges that by reason of a family custom one member of the family, preferably the eldest, is entitled to possession of the family property and the other members are only entitled to claim a maintenance-allowance. He relies in support of that contention on a statement made in the wajib-ul-arz of the village Beoli Islamabad prepared at the first Regular Settlement, on certain statements made by Meharban Singh in previous suits, and some oral evidence showing the mode in which the property is said to have devolved from time to time.

As regards the wajib-ul-arz, its value as evidence of a custom is considerably discounted by the fact that Meharban Singh, who was recorded as the sole owner of Taraf Rautana of this village at the first Regular Settlement and who was probably responsible for the entry contained in it, knew that other claimants might come forward to claim a share in the estate. In the history of the village appended to the wajib-ul-arz (Exhibit A 8) it was stated that the first Summary Settlement of Patti Rautana was made by the British Government with Ram Bakhsh Singh in 1264 Fasli. Ram Bakhsh Singh was the grandson of Dalganjan Singh, one of the uncles of Meharban Singh. The defendant-appellant admitted before the Court below on the 24th January 1911 that the person who held the estate before Meharban Singh was Dalganjan Singh. Dalganjan Singh had two sons, Narpat Singh and Bhawani Singh. Ram Bakhsh Singh was the son of the latter, and even if the devolution of the estate was governed by a family custom of impartibility, Meharban Singh could not have succeeded Dalganjan Singh, so long as Narpat Singh and Ram Bakhsh Singh were alive. The first Summary Settlement was followed by the Mutiny, in the course of which numerous persons left their holdings or estates for fear or other cause. In the Settlement, which took place after the Mutiny, Meharban Singh got himself recognised as the sole proprietor of the Patti, known as Taraf Rautana, and executed a kabuliyat in regard to the same. He was naturally anxious at the same time to ensure that no member of the family should claim a share from him, and this he safeguarded by getting a custom recorded in respect of Taraf Rautana that if a person died leaving several sons by a married wife, his eldest son was to be the owner of the property and to be responsible for the education and maintenance of the remaining sons. No such custom was recorded as prevailing in the other Tarafs or Pattis. He meant thereby to hold the property exclusively for his life and to exclude the junior members of the family from participation, and this he did effectively, for when Lalta Singh and Narpatt Singh filed separate suits for the recovery of their shares in the Patti, he pleaded that there was no custom of division in the family and that the claimants had no right to get possession of any share. The suits of Lalta Singh and Narpatt Singh were dismissed on the ground that they had failed to establish their possession within limitation. Ram Bakhsh Singh filed no suit. On the death of Meharban Singh the names of his sons, Sanwal Singh, Raghubar Singh, Dhurendra Singh and Gajraj Singh, were entered in the revenue papers in pursuance of an order of the Revenue Court dated the 9th November 1881 (Exhibit 5), and when Sanwal Singh died mutation of names was similarly effected in respect of his share in favour of his widow Musammatt Kalkin (Exhibit 16). So far as Lalta Singh and Narpatt Singh were concerned, they only succeeded in retaining possession of certain cultivatory plots on payment of rent [Exhibit A1 (2)], while Musammatt Narain Kuar, the widow of Ram Bakhsh Singh, was allowed to remain in possession of certain other land free of rent as a guzaradar (Exhibit 2).

It is significant, however, that in the partition which took place in 1887 Taraf Rautana was formed into a Mahal and recorded as belonging to Raghubar Singh and his brothers (Exhibit 9), and in the wajib-ul-arz which was prepared at the last Settlement in 1300 Fasli the Mahal was shown as an undivided Zemindari with Raghubar Singh, the present defendant-appellant, as lambardar. One of the paragraphs of the wajib-ul-arz then prepared stated: "Raghubar Singh lambardar, after making collections from the tenants, deposits the revenue and other demands in the Government Treasury, and incurs village-expenses, if any, and, being joint in mess, no necessity has arisen for a rendition of accounts among Raghubar Singh, Sanwal Singh, Dhurendra Singh and Gajraj Singh." (Exhibit 7.) Raghubar Singh himself verified this entry. There can be no doubt, therefore, from the subsequent treatment of the property both on the deaths of Meharban Singh and Sanwal Singh at the time of partition and subsequent settlement that the so-called custom of impartibility recorded in the wajib-ul-arz was a bogus entry or a nullity and was never put into force.

The statements made by Meharban Singh in the suits filed against him by Lalta Singh and Narpatt Singh were similarly valueless and were prompted by considerations of self-interest. The oral evidence adduced by the plaintiffs is of a most unsatisfactory character. The family to which the parties belong is known as the family of Rawats; but the suggestion that one of the members of the family, whoever is considered fit and eligible, is selected as a Rawat by the Janwar Thakurs of the 24 villages roundabout Beoli Islamabad to settle their disputes and to receive their homage annually on the occasion of Holi, seems to be entirely unfounded. The witnesses of the defendant stated that Rawat was the ancestor who founded the Patti; but whether that was so or not the office of Rawat, if it existed, had no connection with or bearing on the impartibility of the estate held by the family. In his statement of the 24th January 1911 the defendant-appellant admitted: "We belong to Taraf Rautana and are called Rawats", and one of the witnesses Bhabhuti Singh (D. W. No. 8) stated that he was also a Rawat and all of the Rautana Thoks were called by that name. Rawat is obviously a family title and no inference as to the impartibility of the property held by the family can be drawn from the possession of that title by its members.

The learned Subordinate Judge who heard the evidence, adduced by the plaintiff, disbelieved it and we see no reason to come to a different conclusion.

MUKUNDA LAL ROY v. BHABASUNDARI DEBYA.

The family having been admittedly joint, the property in dispute has been rightly treated as joint family property. The plaintiffs are entered as the owners of the landed property in dispute to the extent of a two-thirds share, and the mere fact that any portion of it may have been purchased in the name of one or other of the members makes no difference. In fact no argument has been addressed by the learned Counsel for the appellant on that point.

The question raised in the memorandum of appeal regarding the theft of Rs. 85,000 by the plaintiffs-respondents has similarly not been pressed. The partition of the landed property can proceed in the manner provided by section 54 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), s. 153 (b)— Rent suit, dismissal of, on ground that relationship of landlord and tenant not established—Appeal, whether lies.

In a suit for rent in which the amount claimed did not exceed Rs. 50, the plaintiff alleged that the defendant held two jamas under him, one at Rs. 3-12-0 and the other at Rs. 3-15-0 and he claimed to recover arrears of the jama of Rs. 3-15-0. The defendant admitted holding only one jama at Rs. 3-12-0 under the plaintiff, but denied holding any jama at Rs. 3-15-0. The Munsif, who had final powers under section 153 (b) of the Bengal Tenancy Act, holding that the jama claimed by the plaintiff was identical with that alleged by the defendant, dismissed the suit on the ground that there was no relationship of landlord and tenant between the parties in regard to the jama of Rs. 3-15-0 alleged by the plaintiff:

Held, that no appeal lay to the District Judge as the decision of the Munsif was not a decision of the question of the amount of rent annually payable, but was a decision as to the existence of the relationship of landlord and tenant between the parties in respect of the jama sued for. [p. 924, col. 1.]

Rule against the judgment of the District Judge, Rangpur.

FACTS material to the report will appear from the following judgment of the Munsif:—

"This is a suit for recovery of arrears of rent for the plaintiff's share said to be due for the years 1319 to 1322 in respect of a Jama of Rs. 3-15-0 for 1 Done of land situated in Taluq Radha Callan. The claim includes damages at 25 per cent. and is laid at Rs. 19-11-0 as detailed in the plaint.

The defendants contend that they do not hold the disputed Jama under the plaintiff, that they hold a Jama of Rs. 3-12-0 and odd under the plaintiff and that was sued for up to 1320, and that the defendants hold a portion of the disputed land under another landlord.

The point for determination in this case is, whether the relationship of landlord and tenant exists between the parties.

The plaintiff's Pleader maintained that the Jama in suit was different from that alleged by the defendants, and that being so, the previous suit alleged by the defendants does not come into play in this suit at all. The plaintiff's collection papers, to show the existence of the Jama of Rs. 3-12-0 and odd and as a separate thing from the Jama in suit, were called for by the defendants and the plaintiff failed to produce them on the ground that her Gomastha was absent, but I do not consider this to be a sufficient excuse for the non-production of the said papers. The plaintiff's papers show that the Jama in suit was one of Rs. 3-14-0 and odd up to 1312 when it was raised to Rs. 3-15-0 as claimed; but realisation of the Jama after 1312 is meagre and scanty. In my thinking the Jama as claimed is identical with that alleged by the defend ants, but as that is not the plaintiff's case. I cannot grant the plaintiff any relief on that ground and I hold that the relationship of landlord and tenant does not exist between the parties in respect to the Jama in suit.

The result, therefore, is that the plaintiff's suit will be dismissed with costs and interest at 6 per cent. per annum until realisation."

Plaintiff appealed to the District Judge, who overruled the preliminary objection of the respondent that no appeal lay to his Court, on the ground that as the decision of the suit involved a question of title or of the variation of the rate of rent, the appeal to him was competent and allowed the appeal.

The defendant then moved the High Court in revision.

Babu Brojendra Nath Chatterjee, for the Petitioners.—The lower Appellate Court was wrong in holding that an appeal lay from the decision of the Munsif, as that decision involved a question of title or of the variation of the rate of rent. The question is not what was pleaded by the parties or what questions were raised in the suit, but the question is what was decided by the Munsif in dismissing the suit.

Section 153 of the Bengal Tenancy Act clearly lays down that an appeal would lie only if the decree or order has decided a question to land or to some interest in land as between parties having conflicting claims thereto or a question of the amount of the rent annually payable by the tenant. Here the Munsif expressly held that the "relationship of landlord and tenant does not exist between the parties in respect of the Jama in suit." He did not decide any other question. Therefore, the lower Appellate Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the appeal.

Babu Bepin Behari Ghosh II (with him Babu Atul Chandra Gupta), for the Opposite Party.—I submit the Munsif not only decided the question of title to land but also decided the question as to the amount of rent annually payable by the tenant. He held that the Jama in suit did not belong to the plaintiff and thereby decided that the plaintiff had no title to the Jama as claimed. Even if it be supposed that the question of title was not decided in the manner provided for in the proviso to section 153, still it is impossible to say that the Munsif did not decide the question as to the amount of rent payable by the tenant. What did he decide? His judgment shows that the plaintiff alleged that the defendants held two Jamas under him, of one of which the rent was 3-12-0 and of the other of which the rent was 3-15-0. The Munsif has held that the defendants did not hold any Jamas of which the rent was Rs. 3-15-0, but he has held that the Jama as claimed by the plaintiff is identical with that alleged by the defendants. By the word "Jama" he evidently meant the jote or tenancy. Now the plaintiff claimed for the jote in suit an annual rent of Rs 3-15-0. But the Munsif has found that this Jama was a Jama of 3-12-0 as alleged by the defendants. Hence it is apparent that the question decided by the Munsif was that the rent annually payable was Rs. 3-12-0 as alleged by the defendants, and not Rs. 3-15-0 as claimed by the plaintiff. Therefore, I submit the Munsif's decision was appealable, as by it he decided the question of title to land as well as the question of rent annually payable.

Babu Brojendra Nath Chatterji, in reply.—Mere deciding a question of title to land won't do. The question must be decided as between the parties having conflicting claims thereto. There was no third party laying any conflicting claim to the land in suit. As to the argument of the other side that the Munsif decided the question of the amount of rent payable, I submit, that is obviously fallacious. The Munsif has held that the Jama in suit does not belong to the plaintiff. Therefore, the suit should be dismissed. If he had held that the Jama in suit did belong to the plaintiff, but its rent was Rs. 3-12-0 and not Rs. 3-15-0, then of course it might have been said that the question of the amount of rent annually payable was decided. But this rent suit had nothing to do with the Jama of Rs. 3-12-0 which the defendant admitted to hold under the plaintiff. The suit was in respect of a Jama of which the annual rent was alleged to be Rs. 3-15-0, but the Munsif found that such a Jama was not held by the defendant under the plaintiff. Could it be believed that the Munsif would wholly dismiss the suit, if he had in reality held that the rent for the Jama in suit was Rs. 3-12-0 and not 3-15-0? The judgment clearly shows that the Jama sued for was non-existent, and, therefore, the plaintiff was not entitled to a decree.

JUDGMENT.—This is a Rule calling upon the opposite party to show cause why the judgment and decree of the learned District Judge of Rangpur should not be set aside. The judgment and decree in question were passed in an appeal against a decision of the Munsif of Rangpur in a suit for rent. The Munsif in question had final powers under section 153 (b) of the Bengal Tenancy Act and the amount claimed in the rent suit was Rs. 19-11-0 only. The question on which this Rule depends is, whether any appeal lay to the District Judge. The point was raised in his Court and he held that the decision of the suit involved a question of title or of the variation of the rate of rent. To this decision we are unable to agree. All that the Munsif decided was that the relationship of landlord and tenant did not exist between the parties in respect of the Jama for which rent was claimed in this suit. For authority that the decision on such a point is not sufficient to make the proviso to section 153 applicable, we may refer to the case of Shilabati Debi v. Roderiques (1). Plaintiff's case was that the defendant held two Jamas under him one at Rs. 3-12-0 and one at Rs. 3-15-0, and the present suit was for arrears of the Jama of Rs. 3-15-0. The defendant admitted holding one Jama at Rs. 3-12-0 only. On these pleadings the remark of the Munsif that "in my thinking the Jama as claimed is identical with that alleged by the defendant" could not amount to a decision as to the rate of rent. The Munsif's remark, as it stands, is meaningless, since a Jama of Rs. 3-12-0 cannot be identical with a Jama of Rs. 3-15-0, but apparently he meant that the land of the Jama admitted by the defendant was the only land held by him under the plaintiff and that the rent of this was Rs. 3-12-0 only. But this was not a decision of a question of the amount annually payable by the tenant. The remark of the Munsif was incidental and had nothing to do with the decision of the suit, since the suit was bound to fail on the finding that the relationship of landlord and tenant did not exist between the parties in respect of the Jama in suit. We accordingly hold that the order of the learned District Judge was without jurisdiction, since no appeal lay to him. We accordingly set it aside and restore the decree of the Munsif with costs in this Court (which we assess at one gold mohur) and in the lower Appellate Court.

Appeal accepted.

A deed of sale of land contained the following clause: "Should disputes of any kind arise at any time touching the said land on the part of anybody, we will clear them all with our own funds and allow this sale to continue to you uninterruptedly without any kind of loss to you." On attempting to obtain possession, the vendee was resisted by the tenants, who asserted occupancy rights in the land. (2) that the cause of action for the suit arose when it was held that the plaintiff's vendor had no Kudivaram right in the property and the suit was, therefore, within time under Article 115 of the Limitation Act. [p. 925, col. 2.]

Covenants which provide for a continuous exercise of obligations should be regarded as continuing covenants so long as the subject-matter in respect of which the duty is cast subsists. He is entitled to wait until he has exhausted all possible means of obtaining reparation before he has recourse to the covenantor. He will then be entitled to sue for consolidated damages caused to him by the act of the intervener and for the expense he has been put to in attempting to vindicate his title against that party. Mr. P. Narayanamurthi, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The 1st defendant sold the property in suit to the plaintiff on the 8th of December 1906. The document purports to convey both the Melvaram and Kudivaram rights in the property. It is common ground that possession of one of the items, namely, a house site was delivered to the plaintiff. He was unable to get physical possession of the rest of the property as the tenants asserted an occupancy right. Thereupon, he sued the tenants in the District Munsif's Court. He obtained a decree in ejectment on the 30th of December 1909. There was an appeal by the tenants. The lower Appellate Court reversed the Munsif's decision and dismissed the plaintiff's suit on the 13th of September 1910. The High Court confirmed that decree on 23rd August 1912. The present suit was instituted on 22nd August 1915 for cancellation of the sale or for damages in the alternative.

The Subordinate Judge has dismissed the suit on the ground that the cause of action arose on the date of the sale and that as the suit was filed more than 6 years after that date, it was barred by limitation. In this Court, reliance was mainly placed upon a clause in the deed of sale which is in these terms: "Should disputes of any kind arise at any time touching the said land on the part of anybody, we will clear them all with our own funds and allow this sale to continue to you uninterruptedly without any kind of loss to you." In our opinion this is an indemnity clause and should be construed as a continuing covenant. As was pointed out by Stirling, J., in Jacob v. Down (1), covenants which provide for a continuous exercise of obligations should be regarded as continuing covenants so long as the subject-matter in respect of which the duty is cast subsists. The instance of covenants for repairs is cited for this purpose. In our opinion, the clause in the deed which we have quoted is of the same character as a clause providing for continuous repairs; and consequently we hold that it is a continuous covenant. In this view, although a cause of action may arise on the date of the covenant or as soon as there is a breach, the injured party is not bound to sue once and for all for present and prospective damages for the breach of the covenant. The plaintiff is entitled to wait until he exhausts all possible means of obtaining reparation, before he has recourse to the covenantor. He will then be entitled to sue for consolidated damages caused to him by the act of the intervener and for the expenses he has been put to in attempting to vindicate his title against that party: we must, therefore, hold that the suit will be in time if it was brought within 6 years of the date on which it was held by a Court of Law against him that neither he nor his vendor had any Kudivaram rights in the property. The language of Article 115 of the Limitation Act supports this view. See also Secretary of State v. Pemmaraju Venkayya Garu (2).

But there is one difficulty in this case to which apparently the attention of the Court below was not invited. The indemnity clause imposes the duty in the first instance on the 1st defendant. There is no issue on the question whether the 1st defendant was aware of the opposition by the tenants and whether he was asked to carry out his promise contained in the covenant. If the plaintiff had chosen to go to Court without calling upon the defendant to fulfil his undertaking, it may be that he is not entitled to any damages. Moreover, the question as to when the defendants' duty arose and whether there was an understanding that the plaintiff should wait until recourse to law was had, are considerations which ought to be taken into account before deciding the question of limitation finally. For these reasons, we are unable to accept the conclusion of the Subordinate Judge; we would draw his attention to the decision in Hari Tiwari v. Raghunath Tiwari (3), which seems nearer to the present case than all the other decisions quoted by him. Having regard to the fact that the real points in dispute have not been adjudicated upon, we have indicated the general principles on which questions of this kind should be tried. It may be necessary to recast the issues and to add additional issues in the view we have taken of the rights of the parties. The Subordinate Judge will hear applications in that behalf and pass the necessary orders.

We must reverse the decree of the Subordinate Judge and remand the suit to him for disposal in the light of the above observations. Costs in the appeal and in the memorandum of objections will abide.

An instalment bond provided that the money was to be re-paid by five annual instalments and that if there was any default in payment of any of the instalments, the creditor would have the power to recover the entire amount in a lump sum. The bond was executed in 1909 and default was made in payment of the first instalment, but the plaintiff waited till the term provided in the bond had expired, when he brought a suit stating that his claim for the first 2 instalments being barred by time, he made a claim only with regard to the remaining three instalments:

Held, that under the terms of the bond the plaintiff had an option to waive his right to bring the suit at once on the happening of the first default, which right he had exercised and that, therefore, his suit with regard to the last three instalments was not barred. [p. 927, col. 1.]

Civil revision from an order of the Judge of the Court of Small Causes, Bareilly, dated the 13th August 1917.

Mr. Sital Prasad Ghosh, for the Appellant.

Mr. P. N. Banerji, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This was a suit brought upon an instalment bond in the Court of the Judge of Small Causes. The bond was for Rs. 175 with interest and it was to be paid by five annual instalments of Rs. 35 each. The method provided for the payment of the instalments was in these words. As regards the payment of the money it is agreed that the said amount will be paid by instalments in five years. It was further provided that if there was any default in payment of any of the instalments, then the creditor would have the power to claim the entire amount in the lump sum:—"Dayin mausuf ko akhtiar hai ke kul rupia ek musht ba sharah sul ji sadi do rupia mahwari tarikh tahrir tamasuk haza se ba erjai nalish adalat diwani wasul kar lewe." The document was written on the 23rd of February 1909. The first instalment would be payable, according to this bond, at the end of February 1910. It appears from the facts found by the Court below that nothing was paid on account of the first two instalments. The plaintiff then had a cause of action, if he so chose, to bring a suit at once for the recovery of the whole amount due under the bond. He, however, did not choose to sue then. He has brought this suit after the term provided in the bond, and in paragraph 3 of his plaint he states that as the claim for the first two instalments is barred by time, he makes a claim only with regard to the remaining three instalments. The claim was resisted in the Court below on the ground of limitation. The questions for consideration in the Court below were whether under the terms of the instalment bond in suit the cause of action arose on the first default, and whether the plaintiff ought then to have brought the suit and whether by reason of the fact that he allowed the limitation period to elapse his entire claim was barred by time and it was not open to him to sue for the remaining instalments as being within time. The real question for decision, however, was whether under the terms of the bond the plaintiff had an option to waive his right to bring the suit at once on the happening of the first default and whether, as a matter of fact, he did exercise this right of waiver. On the face of the document there can be no possible doubt that he had such a right and his subsequent conduct shows that he did exercise it.

The learned Judge of the Court below has relied on the case of Amolak Chand v. Baij Nath (1) and has held that the plaintiffs in the two cases were similar. The facts of that case, however, are clearly distinguishable from the facts of the present case. The facts of that case as stated at pages 457* and 458* were these. The instalment bond was dated the 7th of July 1904, the whole amount was repayable in $4\frac{1}{2}$ years in equal instalments of Rs. 75 payable every six months. There was a condition in the bond that if any instalment remained unpaid on the due date, then the creditor would be entitled to recover the whole sum at once with interest or that he might sue for each instalment as it fell due and remained unpaid. The first two instalments were paid on the due dates, the third instalment was due on the 7th of January 1906. Neither this nor any of the subsequent instalments were paid. On the 17th of August 1912, i. e., six years and seven months after the 7th of January 1906, the plaintiff brought the suit. An examination of the plaint showed that the plaintiff sued to recover the full amount which was due on the 7th of January 1906 together with interest which fell due by reason of the default of the 7th of January. In his plaint he distinctly stated that the cause of action for the suit accrued on the 7th of January 1906. On these facts the learned Judges held that the plaintiff in that case had elected to take one of the two options given him by the bond, viz., that one which entitled him to recover the full amount of the debt due by reason of the default in one instalment. They went on to say: "It is perfectly clear from the plaint itself that the plaintiffs have not waived that right, which entitled them to recover the whole of the balance due by reason of the default of the 7th of January 1906. In fact, they take their stand upon that provision and seek to enforce their right. The existence of a waiver is distinctly negatived by the plaint, which states that the right accrued on the 7th of January 1906. To enforce that right they had six years from that date." In the present case the plaintiff in distinct terms states that his claim as to the first two instalments was barred by time and that his suit related only to the three remaining instalments. He does not base his cause of action on the default of payment of the first instalment. He does not claim the entire amount due under the bond. He has no doubt claimed interest on the amounts due with respect to the two first instalments. But having regard to the cause of action stated in the plaint, he is not entitled to claim such interest. The learned Judges in the case mentioned above distinguish the case before them from the case of Ajudhia v. Kunjal (2) in these words:—"In regard to the ruling in Ajudhia v. Kunjal (2) an examination thereof shows clearly that it cannot apply to the facts of the present case. That suit was brought to recover the last three of the instalments that were due under that bond, and not the whole amount due by reason of a default in payment of an instalment. It appears to have been proved or assumed that the plaintiffs had forborne to sue, in other words, had waived their rights...in respect of the instalments that were due and had not been paid." These remarks make the case of Ajudhya v. Kunjal (2) fully applicable to this case. The facts of the present case and those of Ajudhia v. Kunjal (2) are almost parallel.

(1) 20 Ind. Cas. 933; 35 A. 455; 11 A. L. J. 664.

*Pages of 35 A.—Ed.

The case of Chandan Singh v. Bidhya Dhar (3) is also distinguishable from the present case. Mr. Justice Chamier distinguished the case before him from the case of Ajudhia v. Kunjal (2) upon the ground that the bond before him provided that in default of payment of any instalment, the debtor was bound to pay the whole amount at once. He held that that circumstance distinguished the case from Ajudhia v. Kunjal (2). The same reasoning is equally applicable in this case. In my opinion the learned Judge of the Court below did not correctly appreciate the terms of the bond in suit. The suit was within time and it ought not to have been dismissed as being barred by time. I allow this application, set aside the judgment and decree of the Court below and remand the case to that Court to be restored to its original number on the file and to be disposed of on the merits. Appeal—Minor respondent—Appellant, failure of, to furnish security for costs of guardian ad litem—Dismissal of appeal against minor—Transfer of appeal—Decree against minor—Dismissal order, effect of.

One of the respondents to an appeal in a mortgage suit being a minor, the District Judge appointed the Nazir of his Court to act as the guardian ad litem of the minor. The appellant, however, failed to furnish security for the costs of the guardian ad litem and the appeal was consequently dismissed as against the minor. Subsequently the appeal was transferred to the Subordinate Judge, who heard a Pleader instructed by a third person on behalf of the minor and decreed the appeal. A few days after, the Subordinate Judge, on being informed of the order passed by the District Judge, vacated his own order against the minor and dismissed the appeal as against him:

Held, that the order of dismissal passed by the District Judge was a perfectly good order and was operative until it was set aside. [p. 930, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, 2nd Court, Midnapur, dated the 24th May 1916, modifying that of the Munsif, 1st Court at Contai, dated the 7th December 1914.

FACTS appear from the judgment and the arguments.

Babu Jyotish Chandra Hazrah, for the Appellant.—In this case the appellants brought a suit for sale against the minor respondent (mortgagor), who was represented by the Nazir of the Munsif's Court at Contai. The suit was dismissed and my client appealed, making the minor a respondent and treating the Nazir of the Munsif's Court as guardian ad litem. He was so made guardian because in the decree of the Munsif the Nazir of the Munsif's Court at Contai was described as guardian of the minor. Notice was duly served upon the Nazir of the Munsif's Court at Contai and he instructed a Pleader, who duly entered appearance. But the Nazir at the same time wrote a letter to the District Judge saying that he was going on leave, and asked for the District Judge's orders as to whether he could continue as a guardian while on leave. The District Judge received that letter in Chambers and passed an order in the order-sheet in the absence of the parties appointing the District Judge's Nazir as guardian ad litem of the minor and noted down that talabana was to be paid within three days. The order was not communicated to the appellant and after three days, talabana not having been paid, the appeal against the minor respondent was dismissed. Nobody knew of this order and the appeal was finally heard by the Subordinate Judge before whom the minor was represented by the Pleader instructed by the first Nazir, i. e., the Munsif's Court Nazir. The appeal was allowed by the Sub-Judge. At the time of the drawing up of the decree, however, it was pointed out to the Subordinate Judge that the appeal against the minor had been dismissed by the District Judge. The Subordinate Judge thereupon vacated his judgment and drew up a decree dismissing the appeal.

I submit that the Nazir of the Munsif's Court was competent to represent the minor in all stages of the litigation. As he received the notice of the appeal and instructed a Pleader to appear, there was no occasion to pass any order appointing anybody else as guardian. The order of the District Judge to that effect is without jurisdiction. Besides, the order was full of illegalities. The letter was received in Chambers, the order appointing the fresh guardian ad litem was passed in Chambers and talabana was called for in Chambers. The orders were never communicated to the appellant.

[FLETCHER, J.—Why did you not look to the order-sheet?]

Because it is no part of the appellant's business. The rules of the High Court, Circular Orders, Volume I, Rule 39, page 83, direct that orders directing anything to be done by the parties shall be communicated to them or to their Pleaders and shall be signed by them or their Pleaders. Besides, the minor, although he has lost his case, cannot say that he went unrepresented. Therefore he cannot complain of any prejudice.

In any event if your Lordships be of opinion that the minor was not legally represented by the Pleader, even then the case ought to be remanded to enable the appellant to serve notice upon the Nazir of the District Judge, Midnapur, and have the appeal re-heard.

[FLETCHER, J.—Why did you not move to have the order of the District Judge dismissing the appeal against the minor set aside? We can't help you now.]

I cannot move against an interlocutory order. Besides I had no notice then.

Babu Santimoy Majumdar, for the Respondents, submitted that after the decree of the Subordinate Judge was drawn up, the appellant preferred a review of the order of the District Judge, which was dismissed for default.

JUDGMENT.

FLETCHER, J.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff against the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge of Midnapur modifying the decision of the Munsif of Contai. The suit was brought to enforce a mortgage. Amongst the defendants was a minor, namely, the defendant No. 1, who appeared in Court through a guardian ad litem. The guardian ad litem appointed in the Munsif's Court was the Nazir, the Chief Ministerial Officer of that Court, and the Nazir seems to have acted all right. That gentleman, however, went on leave when the appeal was preferred against the judgment of the Munsif and the person who was officiating for him was supposed to have succeeded by virtue of his office to the position of the guardian ad litem of the minor defendant No. 1. Whether that was proper or not, it does not matter. However, the officiating Nazir of the Munsif's Court instructed a Pleader to appear on behalf of the minor. But before that—almost a month before—the District Judge had himself appointed an officer of his own Court to be the guardian ad litem of the minor and, the appellant having failed to give proper security for the costs of the guardian ad litem appointed by the District Judge, the appeal as against the defendant No. 1 was dismissed. That is how the matter stood at the date of the hearing of the appeal. At the hearing of the appeal what happened was this: The Pleader instructed by the officiating Nazir of the Munsif's Court who was, so far as I can see, never the guardian ad litem of the minor at all, appeared and argued the case, which he lost and the minor's rights were very seriously prejudiced. Seven days after that, the Subordinate Judge who heard the appeal was informed of what the District Judge had done, dismissing the appeal as against the minor defendant No. 1 on the ground that the plaintiff had been in default in not giving security for the costs of the guardian ad litem. Thereupon, the learned Subordinate Judge reviewed his judgment decreeing the suit against the minor defendant No. 1 and in lieu thereof dismissed it as against him. Subsequently the plaintiff made an application to the learned District Judge to set aside the order or decree dismissing the suit as against the defendant No. 1 for default in finding the costs of the guardian ad litem. That application was not heard, solely owing to the default of the plaintiff. The plaintiff did not provide the necessary materials to enable the Court to adjudicate on that and, having adopted that course, he has only got himself to thank if the ex parte order of the District Judge dismissing the suit against the minor defendant No. 1 for default is given effect to. The plaintiff had ample opportunity before the learned District Judge for showing that this order of dismissal made by him ought to be set aside. As he allowed that opportunity to pass for his own default, he must be bound by the order of dismissal. That order of dismissal is a perfectly good order until it is set aside. In that view of the case, the present appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs.

Although a landlord has an option to treat a person cultivating his land without his permission as a trespasser and to sue him for possession and damages in the Civil Court or to treat him as a tenant and to sue him for rent for the occupation of the same at a fair and equitable rate, he cannot exercise that choice with any effect after a hostile title has been acquired by the occupant by reason of his adverse possession for more than 12 years. The effect of the existence of adverse possession for such a period is to extinguish the remedy of the real owner and the proceedings, if any, taken by him in the Revenue Court to eject the occupant by notice, as if he were a tenant-at-will, are without jurisdiction. [p. 930, col. 2; p. 931, col. 1.]

Appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Unao, dated the 19th June 1917, modifying that of the Munsif, South Unao, dated the 21st December 1916.

Babu Bisheshwar Nath Srivastava, for the Appellants.

The Hon'ble Pandit Gokaran Nath Misra and Mr. P. C. Gupta, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The dispute in these appeals relates to plots Nos. 52/2, 52/3 and 65/2 old, corresponding with Nos. 78, 79 and 80 new, khasra. The plaintiffs sued for possession of the said plots on the allegation that they were the owners thereof and that the defendants wrongfully got them ejected from the same through the Revenue Court. They further set up a title by adverse possession. The defendants denied the plaintiffs' title and pleaded that the land in dispute had a grove which was cut long ago and that the plaintiffs were estopped from asserting an adverse title.

The Court of first instance found in favour of the plaintiffs and decreed the claim, but the lower Appellate Court dismissed it in regard to plots Nos. 52/2 and 52/3 old, corresponding with Nos. 78 and 79 new, khasra and upheld the remainder of the decree. Both the parties appeal.

On behalf of the plaintiffs reliance is placed on what happened in two previous suits, filed by the predecessor-in-title of the defendants against the predecessor-in-title of the plaintiffs in 1885 for the recovery of possession of plot No. 65 old khasra measuring 2 bighas 3½ biswas and plot No. 52 old khasra measuring 5 bighas 15 biswas 8 biswansis respectively. The suits were brought in the Court of the Munsif of Purwa. The allegation on behalf of the plaintiffs in those suits was that the former plot was ban ar land, of which the predecessor-in-title of the present plaintiffs had taken wrongful possession and the latter was a grove, of which the trees had fallen down and which the predecessor-in-title of the present plaintiffs had wrongfully brought under cultivation. The predecessors-in-title of the defendants in both those cases set up their proprietary right, alleging that they were mortgagees of both the plots from Prag Kalwar, whose right to redeem the mortgage had become barred by time, and that they had been in adverse possession of the same for more than 12 years. On the date fixed for hearing of those cases, no one appeared for the then plaintiffs. The defendant was present. Both the suits were, therefore, dismissed for default on the 14th December 1886. The Courts below rightly held that the dismissal of the former suit in regard to plot No. 65 old khasra rendered a fresh suit in regard to the same unmaintainable and that it was not open to the defendants after the lapse of nearly 20 years to treat the plaintiffs as tenants and to seek their ejectment through the Revenue Court. Although a landlord has an option to treat a person cultivating his land without his permission as a trespasser and to sue him for possession and damages in the Civil Court or to treat him as a tenant and sue him for rent for the occupation of the same at a fair and equitable rate, he cannot exercise that choice with any effect after a hostile title has been acquired by the occupant by reason of his adverse possession for more than 12 years. As pointed out in Muhammad Taqi v. Muhammad Baqar (1), the effect of the existence of adverse possession for such a period is to extinguish the remedy of the real owner and the proceedings taken by the defendants in the Revenue Court to eject the plaintiffs by notice, as if they were tenants-at-will, were without jurisdiction.

In regard to plots Nos. 52/2 and 52/3 old khasra the lower Appellate Court, however, observes that as they contained a grove which was mortgaged with the predecessor-in-title of the present plaintiffs, a suit for the resumption of the land after the grove was cut could have been instituted only in the Court of the District Judge and the institution of a suit in the Court of the Munsif of Parwa for the possession of the land in 1886 had, therefore, no effect. But the fact that the defendants held possession under the assertion of an adverse right since 1886 cannot be ignored. According to the predecessor-in-title of the defendants the land had ceased to retain the character of a grove prior to 1886 and had been brought under cultivation by the predecessor-in-title of the present plaintiffs. A suit to eject him as a trespasser was dismissed for default. The suit as then brought was entertainable in the Court in which it was brought and the right of the present defendants to resume the land is now barred by time.

It is pointed out that plot No. 80 new khasra includes No. 52/4 old khasra . But it cannot be said that plot No. 52/4 old khasra was not included in the former suit which related to the entire plot No. 52 old khasra , measuring 5 bighas 15 biswas 8 biswansis .

The appeal filed by the plaintiffs No. 304 of 1917 is, therefore, allowed and that filed by the defendants No. 334 of 1917 dismissed, the claim of the plaintiffs being decreed with costs here and hitherto. The defendants will bear their own costs throughout.

Appeal allowed.

Custom—Alienation by sonless proprietor of ancestral property in favour of daughter in presence of collaterals, validity of—Mair Rajputs of Tahsil Chakwal, Jhelum District.

A sonless Mair Rajput of the Chakwal Tahsil of the Jhelum District is by custom competent to devise the whole of his ancestral estate in favour of his daughters in the presence of his brothers and nephews. [p. 932, col. 1.]

Although the initial presumption throughout the Punjab is against the power of alienation in respect of ancestral land in village communities and the onus probandi at the outset rests on the person asserting such a power, yet in cases of the Muhammadan tribes of the Jhelum District the presumption against the validity of a gift by a sonless proprietor to a daughter or daughter's son is not of great weight and may be easily shifted [p. 931, col. 2.]

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Jhelum, dated the 16th February 1917.

Mr. Nanak Chand, for the Appellants.

Syed Mohsin Shah, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT—The parties are Mair Rajputs of the Chakwal Tahsil of the Jhelum District, and the question for consideration is whether a sonless proprietor is competent to devise the whole of his ancestral estate in favour of his daughter in the presence of his brother and nephew. The Courts below have concurred in answering the question in the affirmative, and after hearing arguments and examining the evidence upon the record I see no adequate reason for dissenting from their conclusion.

As pointed out in Rattigan's Digest of Customary Law (Eighth Edition), paragraph 59, remark 2, although the initial presumption throughout the province is against the power of alienation in respect of ancestral land in village communities, and the onus probandi at the outset rests on the person asserting such a power, yet in cases of the Muhammadan tribes of the Jhelum District the presumption against the validity of a gift by a sonless proprietor to a daughter or daughter's son is not of great weight, and may be easily shifted, vide, inter alia, Sher Jang v. Ghulam Mohi-ud-din (1). It appears from the list of cases appended to the judgment of the Munsif that the Mairs recognise a very extensive power of alienation in respect of ancestral property, and there are in that list four instances of the gift or devise of ancestral property in favour of a daughter or a daughter's son to the exclusion of a brother or brother's son. In Fazl v. Musammatt Bhagbari (2) a Division Bench of this Court (Smythe and Roe, JJ.) held that among Mair Rajputs of the Chakwal Tahsil a proprietor without male issue can by custom make a Will leaving his entire estate to his daughter to the prejudice of his near collaterals. The judgment reported as Faiz Bakhsh v. Jahan Shah (3) also relates to Mair Rajputs of the Chakwal Tahsil and lays down that a gift by a childless proprietor of his entire estate in favour of two of his grand-nephews in the presence of other nephews and grand-nephews is valid by custom.

Upon the record there are two judgments by the Divisional Judge, dated 27th March 1916 (Musahib Khatun v. Khalas) and 6th April 1916 (Lal Khan v. Haider), both of which recognise the validity of a gift by a sonless Mair proprietor in favour of a daughter or daughter's son to the prejudice of his collaterals. On the other hand, we have only two compromises in which the property was divided between the collaterals and the daughters.

In view of the judicial authorities referred to above and the evidence adduced by the daughter, I am of opinion that even if the onus was on her to establish the validity of the Will in her favour, that onus has been fully discharged, and that the collaterals have failed to adduce any instance showing that the power of devise in favour of daughters is not recognised among the Mair Rajputs of the Chakwal Tahsil. Accordingly I affirm the decree of the lower Appellate Court and dismiss the appeal with costs.

*Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 53—
Fraudulent transfer—Presumption—Suits Valuation Act (VII of 1887), s. 11—Under-valuation of suit—
Prejudice to defendant.*

In a suit for declaration of title, the plaintiff set up a kobala (conveyance) executed in his favour by his father. The defendant, a judgment-creditor of the father, pleaded that the kobala was voidable under section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act. Both the lower Courts, holding that there was no evidence that the plaintiff's father had any debts at the time of the kobala, decreed the suit, although it was proved that the kobala was executed in the very year in which the defendant obtained his decree against the plaintiff's father.

Held, that the decision of the lower Courts could not stand, as neither of them had considered the fact that the kobala was executed at a time when the executant was well aware of the probability of the decree of a substantial sum being passed against him, and also as neither Court in considering the evidence and facts of the case had set clearly before its mind the presumption created by clause (2) of section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act. [p. 933, col. 2.]

Where a suit which has been undervalued is tried by a Munsif's Court, the defendant can reasonably say that he has been prejudiced by the case being tried by a Court which had no jurisdiction to try it. [p. 934, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Officiating Subordinate Judge, Jalpaiguri, dated the 23rd May 1916, affirming that of the Munsif, 2nd Court at that place, dated the 23rd January 1915.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Brojo Lal Chakravarti (with him Babu Hemendra Nath Bose), for the Appellants—After the rejection of a claim case the plaintiff brought this suit for declaration of his title to the properties attached by a creditor in execution of a decree obtained against the plaintiff's vendor. The Munsif decreed the suit, holding that the kobala was really a gift and conveyed good title to the plaintiff, the kobala that was without consideration and that the presumption under section 53 of the Transfer of MAMRAJ AGARWALA v. AHAMAD ALI MAHAMAD.

Property Act did not arise with regard to subsequent debts and that there was no evidence to show when plaintiff's vendor became indebted. He also found the value of the properties in suit to be Rs. 3000. On appeal the lower Appellate Court held that the kobala was a real document and not a benami transaction.

The lower Appellate Court has not at all considered the effect of section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act upon the transaction and the fact that the Munsif had no jurisdiction to try this suit, as the value of the subject-matter exceeded his pecuniary jurisdiction.

The presumption under section 53 is applicable to subsequent debts as well. Referred to Palamalai Mudaliyar v. South Indian Export Co., Ltd. (1) and Sadashiv Vaman Dhamankar v. Trimbak Divakar Karandikar (2).

Babus Upendra Kumar Roy, for Babu Krishna Kamal Maitra, for the Respondent.—Section 11 of the Suits Valuation Act cured the defect of jurisdiction, if any. No prejudice has been proved in this case. The plaintiff was entitled to value his suit at Rs. 300 as mentioned in the kobala. Referred to Bibi Phul Kumari v. Ghansyam Misra (3).

The lower Appellate Court not only affirmed the finding of the Munsif as to the bearing of section 53, Transfer of Property Act, upon the facts of this case but also found that the document was a real one and the inadequacy of the consideration, if any, was immaterial.

The question is whether a third person could raise the question of adequacy of consideration which was a matter between the assignor and the assignee. Referred to Bhagwat Dayal Singh v. Debi Dayal Sahu (4).¹

As to the cases referred to by the appellants, the principles enunciated therein apply equally to third persons and no distinction should be made on that score.

Babu Brojo Lal Chakravarti replied.

JUDGMENT.

WALMSLEY, J.—Defendant obtained a decree against the plaintiff's father and in execution of that decree attached certain property. Plaintiff then objected that the property was his and not his father's and he filed a claim before the executing Court. That claim was dismissed. He thereupon brought the present suit for a declaration that the property attached by the decree-holder-defendant was his own property and not his father's. Defendant objected that the suit was undervalued as the property was worth not Rs. 300 but Rs. 3,000 and, therefore, the Munsif in whose Court it was instituted had no jurisdiction to try it. He also contended that the document was not genuine but that it was executed for the purpose of defrauding or defeating the father's creditors.

To take the second point first. The Munsif was of opinion that the document was intended to be a gift and that the consideration money set out in it was only nominal. On appeal the learned Subordinate Judge held that the consideration had actually been paid. Both the Courts then remarked no doubt, with reference to the provisions of section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act, that there was no evidence that the plaintiff's father had any debts at the time of the kobala. This seems to me rather an extraordinary remark to make, because the kobala was executed in the very year in which the defendant obtained his decree against the plaintiff's father. It is not apparent whether the decree was obtained before the kobala or after; but, at any rate, the suit had been instituted, and the plaintiff's father was well aware of the probability of a decree for a substantial sum being passed against him. That is a fact which both the lower Courts ought to have considered carefully. Their remarks show that they were thinking of section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act; but neither Court set clearly before its mind the presumption which is created by clause (2) of that section, and I think that in considering the evidence and the facts in this case they ought to have paid very great attention to the presumption. They have referred to certain rulings as sufficient to justify the decision to which they have come. But the circumstances of those rulings are entirely different, because in those cases the dispute was not between a third person and one of the contracting parties but between the representatives of one contracting party and the other contracting party. This omission in the judgments of the lower Courts necessitates a remand.

Then, with regard to the other objection that the suit was tried by a Munsif who had no jurisdiction to try it, the Munsif remarked that the objection was disposed of by the decision in the case of Bibi Phul Kumari v. Ghansyam Misra (3). That view appears to me entirely wrong. Their Lordships of the Privy Council did not lay down any proposition such as is suggested by the Munsif. I think that, having found the value of the property to be Rs. 3,000, the Munsif should have gone on to hold that he had no jurisdiction to try the suit. It is objected that section 11 (2) of the Suits Valuation Act prevents us from entertaining the objection at the present stage. It appears to me, however, that the defendant can reasonably say that he has been prejudiced by the case being tried by a Court which had no jurisdiction to try it; and in the present instance, as the case is being remanded, I am the more unwilling to accept respondent's contention.

I think that the decrees of the lower Courts must be set aside, and the case be sent back to the District Judge for him to make it over for trial to a Subordinate Judge with jurisdiction. Costs of this Court and of the two lower Courts will abide the result.

JUDGMENT.—The only question for decision in this appeal is one of estoppel.

The judgment of the Court below is to the effect that the plaintiffs, who are the appellants here, are estopped from suing on a mortgage executed in their favour which was the basis of their claim in the lower Court.

In order to elucidate the point before us it is necessary to refer to what took place previous to the present litigation.

In the year 1868 one Baldeo Bakhsh, who was the grandfather of the defendant-respondent Har Dayal, executed a mortgage in favour of one Daya Shankar in respect of a four annas share in a village called Satan. It is admitted that eventually the mortgagee obtained possession over the whole of the mortgaged property and that his representatives-in-interest were in possession till a short time ago.

In February 1912 the defendant Har Dayal executed a mortgage with possession in favour of the plaintiffs appellants Badri Bishal and Sheo Sahai. The mortgage money was a sum of over Rs. 4,000 and a portion of the consideration was left with the mortgagees to redeem the mortgage of 1888. About a fortnight after this mortgage was executed, a suit was brought against the mortgagees on behalf of Har Dayal by his nextfriend Baij Nath for the purpose of having the mortgage-deed set aside on the ground that Har Dayal was a minor and that he had been tricked into making the mortgage in the defendants' favour. Shortly after this it is admitted that Baij Nath who appeared in the suit as Har Dayal's next friend was appointed guardian of the person and property of Har Dayal.

The suit was contended in the Court of the Additional Judge of Unao. Issues were framed and we have now to consider what took place on the 26th of March 1913 in the Court of the Additional Judge. The order-sheet of the record of that suit shows that the case was up for hearing on the date just mentioned in the presence of the nextfriend Baij Nath, who was represented by Babu Lakshmi Narain, Vakil. The defendants on that date were represented by a Vakil named Babu Prag Narain. It was intimated by the Pleaders to the Court that an arrangement had been come to between the parties and that payment of the money which the defendants had agreed to receive was not possible on that date, inasmuch as the banker who was to have brought the money to Court had been unable to produce it. The Pleaders asked the Court for four days' adjournment promising to put in a compromise on the next date for hearing. The learned Judge took down the statements of the Pleaders and the parties. Baij Nath, the next friend of the plaintiff Har Dayal, told the learned Judge that he had agreed to pay a fixed sum to the defendants, who in their turn had agreed to relinquish their rights under the mortgage-deed in suit. The general agent of the 1st defendant made the following statement:—"I have agreed to relinquish my right under the mortgage in suit if the sum fixed to-day is paid to my master Badri Bishal by plaintiff's next friend." A similar statement was made by the 2nd defendant Sheo Sahai, who was present in person. He deposed that he had agreed to relinquish his right under the mortgage in suit if the sum agreed upon was paid to himself and the other mortgagee.

After these statements had been recorded, the learned Judge fixed the 29th of March 1913 for the filing of the compromise. On the 29th of March 1913 what took place was this. The plaintiff's Pleader Babu Lakshmi Narain withdrew the plea of minority which had been set up in the plaint, and intimated that it ought to be considered that his client was of full age at the time he made the mortgage in the defendants' favour. The defendants on this date were represented by two Pleaders and both of the Pleaders informed the Court that they had no objection to the withdrawal of the plea, the fact being that the defence to the suit was that Har Dayal was of full age at the time the mortgage was made.

This statement having been made, the Additional Judge ordered the plaint to be returned to the plaintiff for amendment. Obviously it was necessary to alter the plaint in view of the withdrawal of the allegation that the plaintiff was a minor. The plaint was duly amended, signed by Har Dayal himself who was present, and lodged in Court. After this had been done, the learned Judge proceeded to inquire regarding the terms of the settlement. The plaintiff's Pleader admitted that the agreement was that the plaintiff was to pay a sum of Rs. 1,300 to the defendants, who were for this consideration to relinquish all their rights under the mortgage-deed. The general agent of the defendant, Badri Bishal was present in Court and when he was questioned regarding this matter, the only answer he could give was that he could not say exactly if Rs. 1,300 was the sum fixed. The matter, however, was made clear by the evidence of Babu Prag Narain, who was thereupon called as a witness. He deposed that the terms which were settled between the parties on the 26th of March 1913 were that the plaintiff was to pay a sum of Rs. 1,300 to the defendants and that the defendants were to give up their claim under the mortgage-deed in suit. It was further agreed that the parties would bear their own costs. Having ascertained these facts the Judge proceeded to deliver judgment. He found that the parties had come to terms in the sense above mentioned and he consequently directed that the plaintiff's claim to have the mortgage-deed of the 9th of February 1912 executed by him in favour of the defendants Badri Bishal and Sheo Sahai set aside should be decreed upon payment of Rs. 1,300 to the defendants. The judgment directed that the sum of Rs. 1,300 was to be paid on or before the 3rd of April 1913, failing which the plaintiff's claim would stand dismissed with costs.

In order to raise the money which he had to pay according to the directions contained in this judgment, Har Dayal on the 31st of March 1913 executed a mortgage of the four annas share of Mauza Satan in favour of Jagan Nath, who is the 2nd defendant in the present suit. Jagan Nath, it may be mentioned, is the full brother of Baij Nath who had been acting as the next friend of Har Dayal in the suit of 1912. The mortgage in favour of Jagan Nath was for a sum of Rs. 5,000. It was arranged that out of this money Rs. 1,300 should be deposited in Court to satisfy the decree of the 29th of March 1913. We find from the record (Exhibit B-16) that this sum of Rs. 1,300 was actually lodged in Court on the 31st of March by Har Dayal and his mortgagee Jagan Nath.

After the close of the proceedings in the Court of the Additional Judge, Badri Bishal and Sheo Sahai brought an appeal in this Court which was disposed of on the 10th of March 1915. The case was compromised in this Court between Badri Bishal and Sheo Sahai on the one side and Har Dayal on the other, and the result of the judgment of this Court was that the appeal of Badri Bishal and Sheo Sahai was allowed in consequence of which the decree of the 29th March 1913 of the Additional Judge was set aside. Jagan Nath the mortgagee and his brother Baij Nath were made parties to the appeal in this Court, but their names were removed from the record and it is common ground that whatever was decided in this Court in no way affects the rights of either Baij Nath or Jagan Nath, whatever they may be. We may mention here that after taking this mortgage of the 31st of March 1913 Jagan Nath brought a suit for redemption of the mortgage of 1868 and obtained a decree. He paid the money into Court on the 23rd of March 1914. The result, therefore, is that at the present moment Jagan Nath is in possession of the four annas share of Mauza Satan as a mortgagee.

Badri Bishal and Sheo Sahai, having managed to get the decree of the 29th of March 1913 set aside in appeal in this Court, have now brought the present suit in which they claim possession of the four-annas share under the mortgage which was executed in their favour on the 9th of February 1912. One of the defences which has been set up to this claim and the defence which the Subordinate Judge has accepted is that Badri Bishal and Sheo Sahai are estopped from setting up any rights under their mortgage of the 9th of February 1912. The Subordinate Judge has found in favour of the defendants and has dismissed the suit on this ground alone.

It is this question of estoppel which has been argued before us by the learned Counsel for the appellants. In our opinion the decision of the lower Court is perfectly correct. The facts have been stated in detail and it is impossible, in our opinion, for the appellants to contend that on these facts they are now in a position to set up their rights as mortgagees under the deed of the 9th of February 1912. It is perfectly clear that by the proceedings which were taken in the Court of the Additional Judge of Unao on the 29th of March 1913 the present plaintiffs surrendered whatever claim they had under this mortgage for a payment of Rs. 1,300 to be made to them by Har Dayal. Har Dayal had become the plaintiff in the case, and it is not to be doubted that there was a definite agreement between him and the present appellants. That agreement was communicated to the Court and a decree was passed upon it. On the strength of this agreement Jagan Nath respondent advanced the money on the mortgage of the 31st of March 1913, and it was out of this money that Har Dayal deposited in Court the Rs. 1,300 which he was bound to pay to Badri Bishal and Sheo Sahai. In these circumstances Jagan Nath has certainly the right to say that the present plaintiffs appellants cannot as against him be heard to set up any rights under their mortgage of the 9th of February 1912. Jagan Nath claims title under Har Dayal, and the benefit of an estoppel can be claimed either by the person to whom the representation is made or by his privy. It is not to be doubted here that Jagan Nath is in privy of estate with Har Dayal. It may be that since the time the representation was made Har Dayal has come to some other arrangement with Badri Bishal and Sheo Sahai. That fact, however, cannot deprive Jagan Nath of the benefit of the estoppel, which passed to him as soon as he took a mortgage of the property on the 31st of March 1913. This finding is sufficient to dispose of the case. It is not necessary for us to inquire into the validity of the mortgage set up by Jagan Nath or whether the plaintiffs are in a position to deny the validity of that mortgage. It is sufficient for us to say that on the principle of estoppel they are debarred from setting up any rights under their own document, and, as the whole of their case is based upon the terms of that document and as it is upon the strength of this document that they are seeking possession as against Jagan Nath, the result is that their suit was rightly dismissed and their appeal must fail.

We affirm the judgment of the Court below and dismiss this appeal with costs to the answering respondents.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. II, r. 2, O. XXXIV, r. 14—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 99, principle of, whether applicable to Punjab—Mortgage—Interest, suit for—Subsequent suit for principal and interest, maintainability of.

Section 99 of the Transfer of Property Act having been repealed by Order XXXIV, rule 14, Civil Procedure Code, which has been expressly held to be not applicable to the Punjab, the principle of that section can no longer be applicable to this Province. [p. 938, col. 1.]

Where a mortgagee has already sued and obtained a decree for interest at a time when he could also have sued for the principal, his subsequent suit for the recovery of the principal is barred by Order II, rule 2 of the Civil Procedure Code. [p. 938, col. 2.]

First appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Delhi, dated the 20th February 1915.

Lala Moti Sagar, R. S., for the Appellant.

The Hon'ble Pandit Sheo Narain and Mr. Sardha Ram, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the mortgagee sued for interest in 1908 and obtained a decree for Rs. 2,266-13 0 with charge on the property mortgaged. In execution proceedings he had the equity of redemption attached. The judgment-debtor objected, quoting Order XXXIV of the Civil Procedure Code and urging that the mortgagee could not bring the property to sale on such a decree, and that if he wanted to sell up the property he should "get a decree according to law." The first Court disallowed his objections but on 27th October 1913 Mr. Clifford, Additional Divisional Judge, allowed the objections on appeal, holding that the lower Court's order was opposed to Order XXXIV, rule 14, Civil Procedure Code, and to Jagan Nath v. Budhwa (1), and that the latter ruling must be followed in preference to Kishu Pershad Singh v. Jamuna Pershad Sahu (2) on which the lower Court had relied.

The mortgagee then brought this suit for principal and interest, and it has been dismissed by the lower Court as barred by Order II, rule 2. Hence this appeal.

For the appellant it is urged that the respondent is estopped from pleading Order II, rule 2, as he has himself in his former objections invoked the aid of Order XXXIV, rule 14, which itself lays down that Order II, rule 2, is not to be a bar to a fresh suit in such cases. We are, however, of opinion that all that the judgment-debtor meant to do when he quoted Order XXXIV was to claim the benefit of the principle embodied in the first part of clause (1) of the rule. He cannot have meant to rely on the whole of that rule, for the second clause of the rule expressly lays down that nothing in the first clause shall apply to any territories to which the Transfer of Property Act has not been extended. So Order XXXIV, rule 14 (1), does not apply to Delhi at all, and the second part of it cannot be used to evade the provisions of Order II, rule 2. Nor can the first part of it be applied, but it is, of course, arguable that the principle therein embodied may be applied, for in fact that is practically Rai Sahib Moti Sagar's second contention in this case. The respondent certainly never bound himself down to refrain from pleading Order II, rule 2, as a defence, and we are of opinion that in quoting Order XXXIV in his objections he only meant to rely on the principle embodied in the first part of Order XXXIV, rule 14, clause 1.

Whether Mr. Clifford's order was right or wrong we need not now decide. We can only hold that Order XXXIV, rule 14 clause (1), is inapplicable to the Punjab or Delhi, and we have considerable doubts whether Jagan Nath v. Budhwa (1) still holds good under the new Civil Procedure Code. But if Mr. Clifford's order was wrong, the decree-holder should have attacked it by further appeal. All that we have to decide now is the question of estoppel, and as we hold that the respondent never meant to rely on the latter part of clause (1) of Order XXXIV, rule 14, or to bind himself down not to plead Order II, rule 2, we hold that there is no estoppel.

Rai Sahib Moti Sagar's next contention is that even apart from Order XXXIV, rule 14, he can still maintain the suit, the principles of section 99 of the Transfer of Property Act being still applicable to the Punjab. But this section has been deliberately repealed by the Legislature, and has been replaced by Order XXXIV, rule 14, which has been expressly held to be not applicable to the Punjab. After this to apply the principles of section 99 is, in our opinion, out of the question. As is aptly said in Mehr Bakhsh v. Sanjhe Khan (3),

(3) 33 Ind. Cas. 802; 18 P. R. 1916; 194 P. W. R. 1915,

"It is exceedingly difficult to see how, in view of the change of the law thus effected by the latest legislative enactment on the subject under consideration, the Courts of this Province, to which the Transfer of Property Act has never been extended, can recognize and act upon the technical rule embodied in section 99 of the Act." We note also that the principle embodied in section 99 is contained in the first five lines, and that the last two lines which say "he may institute such suit notwithstanding anything contained in the Code of Civil Procedure, section 43," can scarcely be described as containing a "principle."

Lastly Rai Sahib Moti Sagar urges that Order II, rule 2, is no bar because his client was not bound under the terms of the mortgage-deed to sue for principal and interest at once. True, but the fact remains that at the time when he sued for interest he could also have sued for principal; he did not do so, and so the subsequent suit is now barred by Order II, rule 2.

This appeal fails and is dismissed, but the appellant seems to be a heavy loser, and we pass no order as to costs of this appeal.

Appeal dismissed.

of the properties hypothecated. One of the defendants, who had since the decree become possessed of four-fifths of the properties charged, paid off the decretal amount and then sued the other defendants for contribution:

Held, that as it was quite unnecessary for the plaintiff to pay off the decretal debt or any part of it, the claim for contribution could not succeed. [p. 940, col. 2.]

A claim which has become barred by limitation at the time of filing of the written statement in a suit is not a debt legally recoverable by the defendant from the plaintiff and cannot, therefore, be allowed to be set off against the plaintiff's claim. [p. 941, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decision of the District Judge, Nadia, dated the 28th July 1916, reversing that of the Munsif, Krishnagore, dated the 16th December 1915.

FACTS material to the report will appear from the following extracts from the judgment of the lower Appellate Court:—

"These appeals have arisen out of a suit for contribution. Akhoy Kumari became entitled to realise a sum for maintenance according to a decree. Under that decree certain property of the plaintiff was attached and to release it he was compelled to pay an amount to her, and he now seeks to obtain from the defendants the share of the amount paid by him which was due from them to the plaintiff.

The claim of Akhoy Kumari as against the present plaintiff and defendants was settled by the appellate decrees in a suit brought by Akhoy Kumari against them, and to ascertain the liability of the present plaintiff and defendants to Akhoy Kumari we cannot go behind those decrees.

The Subordinate Judge in that suit held that certain property was subject to a charge for the maintenance money due to Akhoy Kumari and that the present plaintiff (defendant No. 7 in that suit) purchased four-fifths of that property with knowledge of the charge. At the same time he exonerated the present defendants from personal liability for the maintenance. On appeal the District Judge held that the defendants were personally liable and there was no charge on the property purchased by the plaintiff and he had no notice of the charge.

On appeal the Hon'ble High Court set aside the decree of the District Judge as regards the plaintiff (defendant No. 7 in that suit) and also modified that decree so as to exempt defendant No. 5 from personal liability. The result is that the property of which the plaintiff has purchased four fifths share, remains subject to a charge for the maintenance and all the defendants, except defendant No. 5, are personally liable. However, Akhoy Kumari, in releasing defendant No. 5 from personal liability, cannot equitably make the remaining defendants personally liable for more than six-sevenths of the maintenance charge.

From the ckrarnamah referred to in Exhibit B it is clear that the maintenance allowance was, by agreement between all those liable, to be realised, if it fell into arrears, by the sale of the hypothecated property. So that the allowance should be regarded in the first instance as a charge upon that property and should only be realised personally from the defendants in case Akhoy Kumari failed to realise it by the sale of the property.

In this view of the case the defendants are not liable at all for contribution * * *

Babu Mohendra Nath Roy (with him Babus Manmatha Nath Roy and Surendra Kumar Roy), for the Appellant.—I come under section 69 of the Indian Contract Act. The learned Judge refers to Order VIII, rule 6, illustration (g) of the Civil Procedure Code. Here plaintiff claimed jointly against all the defendants and one of the defendants No. 6 cannot claim a set-off against him separately. Upon what principle can he claim such a set off? I submit on no principle is the defendant entitled to claim a set off.

[CHITTY, J.—How do you get out of section 70 of the Indian Contract Act?]

He paid off the decretal amount for the benefit of myself and of other judgment-debtors. Therefore, he is not entitled to get that from me alone, but from others as well.

Babu Hara Prasad Chatterjee (with him Babus Manmotho Nath Mukerjee and Satindra Nath Mukherjee), for the Respondents.—As to the first point I am under no liability to contribute at all. On the other hand I can claim a set-off.

[CHITTY, J.—If the suit is dismissed against you your set-off is gone.]

KANAILAL KUNDU v. NITYA LAL MUKHERJEE.

Your Lordships have jurisdiction to grant equitable relief.

In Ramdhari Singh v. Parmanund Singh (1) it has been held that there is a right of set-off not only in cases of mutual debts but also in cases of cross demands, arising out of the same transaction. Under the Indian Contract Act, section 70, the plaintiff is bound to pay compensation to me.

[CHITTY, J.—You do not fill the same character as in Order VIII, rule 6, illustration (g). You can only claim against defendant No. 7 and you cannot claim against the other defendants.]

The provisions of the Civil Procedure Code are not exhaustive. They do not take away from parties their equitable rights of set-off. Order VIII, rule 6, illustration (g), is applicable in cases of joint claims but if the claim is both a joint and separate one as in the present case, it won't apply.

[CHITTY, J.—You paid the sum for which you claim set-off, i. e., Rs. 430, which was paid by you in satisfaction of another decree of Akhoy Kumari Debi for maintenance on April 1911. How can you claim it in September 1914 when the present suit was filed, for it was time-barred? For the rules says "legally recoverable," and so even an equitable set-off must be claimed within time, not to speak of your set-off in this case, which is in respect of an ascertained sum of money.]

In Sheo Saran Singh v. Mahabir Pershad Shah (2) it has been held that limitation is no bar to a set-off. Provisions of the Civil Procedure Code do not take away the right to equitable set-off.

[CHITTY, J.—But that is not the case of a set-off by a defendant in a suit. An equitable set-off is an unascertained sum. But this is the case of a definite legal set-off.]

My submission is that section 70 of the Indian Contract Act is not applicable in this case.

[CHITTY, J.—But your claim to a set-off is barred by limitation.]

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff Kanailal Kundu arising out of a suit for contribution brought by him against a number of defendants. We are now only concerned with Gopal Das Mukherjee defendant No. 5 or rather, as that defendant is dead, his legal representatives, and with Mohini Mohan Mukherjee, the defendant No. 6.

Gopal Das Mukherjee defendant No. 5 was expressly exempted from personal liability under the decree in favour of Akhoy Kumari Debi passed by this Court, and the learned Pleader for the appellant admits that he cannot press the appeal as against the representatives of this defendant, more particularly as Gopal Das Mukherjee had no further interest left in the properties charged.

As against defendant No. 6 it is urged that he was made personally liable by the decree of the lower Appellate Court in favour of Akhoy Kumari Debi and that he is liable to contribute. The answer to the plaintiff's suit for contribution against this defendant is that the decree of the Court of first instance in the maintenance suit, while providing that certain defendants should pay off the decretal amount within four months from the date of the decree, went on to order that, on their failure to do so, the money should be realized by sale of the properties hypothecated. It was, therefore, quite unnecessary for the plaintiff to pay off this debt, or any part of it, in order to save the properties charged from being sold. His reason for doing this is obvious, because we are told that he has now become possessed of four-fifths of the properties charged. It was, therefore, to his benefit to save the properties charged from the burden of this debt at the expense of the persons who were his co-defendants in that suit. We think, therefore, that his suit against the defendant No. 6 was rightly dismissed by the learned District Judge.

Then comes the question of the set-off which was claimed by defendant No. 6 in his written statement. He asked that a decree might be passed in his favour for Rs. 345-12-6, which represented the four-fifths share which was held by the plaintiff in the property together with interest. It appears that the defendant No. 6 made a payment of Rs. 430 on 12th April 1911. He did this to save from attachment, not the properties which were charged with the payment of maintenance of Akhoy Kumari Debi, but other properties of his own which had been attached by that lady in execution of her decree. Here again, the defendant No. 6 was equally at fault with the present plaintiff in paying off money which he was not really bound to pay. He might have answered in those execution proceedings that the lady must first proceed against the properties charged and it would certainly have been to his advantage to do so because, as we understand, he has no further interest in those properties. However that may be, his right to contribution from the plaintiff or any other of his co-judgment-debtors accrued from 12th April 1911. This suit was filed on 17th September 1914 and his written statement claiming the set-off was filed on 28th January 1915. By that time any claim which he had against the plaintiff for contribution had become time-barred, and it could not be said to be a debt legally recoverable by the defendant No. 6 from the plaintiff. For this reason alone his claim to set-off must necessarily fail. There is the further objection to his set off regarded as a substantive claim, that he was under no obligation to pay this money and that he ought not to have paid it but should have insisted on the plaintiff Akhoy Kumari Debi proceeding against the properties charged.

This appeal must be dismissed against the representatives of defendant No. 5 with costs. It must also be dismissed against the defendant No. 6 as regards contribution, but the decree in his favour for set-off must also be reversed and his claim on that account dismissed. As between him and the plaintiff we make no order as to costs.

WALMSLEY, J.—I agree.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 1938 OF 1916.

GASPARI LOUIS—DEFENDANT—APPELLANT

versus

REV. FR. C. P. GONSALVES—PLAINTIFF—
RESPONDENT.

Canon Law—Roman Catholic Church, constitution of and law applicable to—Church adopting rules different from those of parent body, effect of—Custom, proof of—Question of law or fact.

The Church of England is an established church and is, therefore, subject to the ordinary Courts of Law not only as to matters temporal but even as to matters of doctrine. [p. 942, col. 2.]

The Roman Catholic Church is not an established church but a voluntary association, and any member who joins that church will be bound by any rules which it has framed for its internal discipline and for the management of its affairs [p. 942, col. 2; p. 943, col. 1.]

Long v. Bishop of Cape Town, (1863) 1 Moo. P. C. (N. S.) 411; 15 E. R. 756; 138 R. R. 553 and Merriman v. Williams, (1882) 7 A. C. 484; 51 L. J. P. C. 95; 47 L. T. 51, followed.

If a branch voluntary association adopts rules which differ materially from those of the parent body, then the members of that association will not be members of the parent body but will be an independent organisation with their own rules. [p. 943, col. 1.]

The Canon Law recognises no distinction between the spiritual and temporal powers of the Papacy, and the Episcopate and a member of any church which is part and parcel of the Universal Catholic Church would be bound by the Canon Law. [p. 943, col. 1.]

If a church, while adopting in the main the doctrines of the Roman Catholic Church, has yet erected certain rules different from the rules of the Catholic Church in matters of discipline and management, those rules must be proved in the same way in which a custom would have to be proved in a Court of Law. [p. 943, col. 1.]

Questions of custom, though they may in the end become questions of law, are at the outset necessarily questions of fact. [p. 943, col. 1.]

Where an appointment as manager of a Vicar in a Roman Catholic Parish Church by the Bishop was questioned on the ground that he was not appointed by the junta composed of the heads of houses in a village as was the custom and that the delegation of any authority by the Bishop was only permissive:

Held, (1) that whether the church be viewed as a branch of the Roman Catholic Church or as a voluntary association the appointment was valid [p. 943, col. 1.]

(2) that the question whether the custom was for the junta to appoint was one of fact on which the finding of the lower Appellate Court could not be interfered with in second appeal. [p. 943, col. 1.]

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court, South Canara, in Appeal Suit No. 502 of 1915, preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif, Udipi, in Original Suit No. 232 of 1914.

LOUIS V. GONSALVES.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. T. R. Ramachandra Aiyar (with him Mr. K. P. Lakshman Rao), for the Appellant.—The plaintiff has no right to sue. The appointment of Vicar for the church in question rests with the junta, i. e., the heads of houses. They have not exercised their right and the plaintiff was not nominated by them. The Bishop had no power to appoint the plaintiff as Moktessor. In matters spiritual, the Parish Church is no doubt bound by the authority of the Canon Law, but the temporal possessions of the church and rights of property are governed by the law of the land.

Mr. B. Sita Rama Row, for the Respondent.—The church in question is bound by the Canon Law as it is part of the established Catholic Church. The Bishops, to whom the Pope's authority is delegated, have absolute control over the churches in their diocese in matters both spiritual and temporal. The right claimed on behalf of the junta is only of a permissive character and it is open to the Bishop to resume the power delegated to them at his will. The lower Appellate Court has found that there was no recognised or binding custom whereby the appointment of Moktessor vested in the junta. That finding cannot be interfered with in second appeal.

JUDGMENT.—This suit, together with an execution petition which turns upon it, was brought by the Reverend Gonsalves, Vicar of the Roman Catholic Parish Church at Kalianpur, for arrears of rent due by tenants of church property. The only defence with which we are concerned is the defence that the plaintiff was not entitled to sue, as his appointment as Manager or Moktessor of the church property was not a valid one. The Vicar was appointed by the Bishop upon the 14th November 1914 and the facts leading up to the appointment were these. The temporal affairs of the church were ordinarily administered by a body known as the junta, composed of the heads of houses in the village. This body has been in existence for something like thirty years and has claimed and exercised the right to appoint the Moktessor. The last Moktessor appointed by the junta was a Mr. Louis, who resigned his appointment in 1913. Attempts were then made to get the junta to appoint a successor, but the meeting held was so disorderly that no valid appointment could be made, and the Vicar so informed the Bishop. The Bishop thereupon appointed the Vicar to the office of Moktessor pending further arrangements. In that capacity he brought this suit and the validity of his appointment is challenged.

The plaintiff puts his case at its highest on this broad ground. This church is part of the Universal Catholic Church and is bound by its laws, that is to say, by the Canon Law, and it is an unquestioned tenet of the Canon Law that the temporalities of the church vest in the Pope whose authority may be regarded as delegated to the Bishops to the extent of their several dioceses. On this view any further delegation of his complete authority over the church property by the Bishop is merely permissive and can be resumed by him at will.

On the other side it was argued that the authority of the Canon Law is confined to the spiritual side and could not affect rights of property or kindred rights in the temporal possessions of the church, which would be governed by the law of the land as administered by the Courts.

We may say at once that we think any analogies drawn from the decisions relating to the property of the English Established Church are not really applicable to the present case. The Church of England is properly described as established just because of this unique feature about it, that it is subjected to the ordinary Courts of Law not only as to matters temporal but even as to matters of doctrine. This is due to a variety of historical causes which need not now be examined. The Roman Catholic Church is not an established church. It is what is described as a voluntary association in the English cases; and the result of those cases, of which the most important are Long v. Bishop of Cape Town (1) and Merriman v. Williams (2), seems to be this: If you join a voluntary association, you will be bound by any rules which it has framed for its internal discipline and for the management of its affairs. You may adopt the doctrines of the established or any other church en bloc, but if the voluntary association has adopted rules which differ materially from those of what may be called the parent body, the members of that association will not be members of the parent church but will be an independent organization with their own rules. It seems to us that the appellant in this case is in a dilemma. If his church is part and parcel of the Universal Catholic Church, as apparently he wishes it to be regarded, he must be assumed to be bound by the law of the church, (i. e.) the Canon Law, and if that be so, it is clear that the control of temporalities vests in the Bishop, since the Canon Law recognizes no distinction between the spiritual and temporal powers of the Papacy and its local representatives, the Episcopate. If this church is to be regarded as an independent voluntary association which while adopting in the main the doctrines of the Roman Catholic Church has yet erected certain rules different from the rules of the Catholic Church in matters of discipline and management, then those rules must be proved in the same way that a custom would have to be proved in a Court of Law. Questions of custom may often in the end become questions of law, as in the familiar instances where the Courts have to say whether a custom is reasonable, or is not inconsistent with the law of the land, or with the terms of some document, such as e. g., a contract. But at the outset they must necessarily be questions of fact. You must first prove that the thing is done before you can go on to enquire whether it legally may be done. Looking at the case from this point of view, it seems sufficient to say that the learned Judge has found that the evidence put forward has failed to support the contention that the junta has established a recognised custom of holding in its hands the appointment of a Moktessor. He has found as a fact that such appointments as they have made have been merely permissive as a matter of convenience and that the Bishop has never relinquished his claim to be the final repository of the power of appointment. We think that even if this be regarded as a voluntary association, a person who joins it must be considered as prima facie subscribing to the rules of the Catholic Church as embodied in the canons, unless he can give affirmative proof of an established usage to the contrary. The learned Judge by his finding has negatived the existence of such a rule in the present case, and as we do not think he misdirected himself in law in coming to that finding of fact, we cannot disturb it.

(1) (1863) 1 Moo. P. C. (N. S.) 411; 15 E. R. 756; 138 R. R. 553.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 75—Instalment bond—Default in payment of instalment—Waiver, forbearance to sue, whether amounts to—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 92—Oral undertaking by creditor to waive right to enforce bond, admissibility of.

A mere forbearance to sue for the whole amount of a bond payable by instalments, on default in payment of one or more instalments, is not a waiver within the meaning of Article 75 of Schedule I of the Limitation Act. [p. 944, col. 2.]

Where a registered bond payable by instalments provided that on default in payment of two consecutive instalments the creditor would be entitled to sue for the whole amount due under the bond:

Held, that a subsequent oral undertaking on the part of the creditors at the request of the debtors to waive their right to enforce the payment of the whole amount on two successive defaults was a variation of the contract and was, therefore, not admissible in evidence under section 92 of the Evidence Act [p. 945, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Dacca, dated the 27th May 1916, confirming that of the Officiating Subordinate Judge, Dacca, dated the 22nd April 1915.

HARA KUMAR SAHA v. RAM CHANDRA PAL.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Dwaika Nath Chakrabutty (with him Babu Gopal Chandra Das), for the Appellants.—The appeal is on behalf of the appellants and arises out of a registered instalment bond executed by the defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3 and the father of defendant No. 4 on the 9th August 1905. The suit has been dismissed on the ground of limitation, and the question involved is one of waiver. The terms in the bond were that in case of default in two consecutive instalments, the plaintiffs would be entitled to sue for the realization of the whole of their dues. The last instalment to be paid under the original bond was Asar 1322 B. S. The last payment was made in Baisak 1313. The present suit was instituted in Jaist 1321. In 1313 B. S. at the request of the defendants the plaintiffs promised them indulgence and said that they would not insist upon their right to sue for the realization of the whole of their dues in case of default. The question is—Is a promise in advance to waive some right or to show some favour equivalent to varying the terms of the contract? I submit not. It is a promise to give up a right to sue which accrues on the contract. The contract is in no way modified if there is waiver of a right to sue at the request of the debtor at the time when the right to sue arises on the default. Mere abstinence from suing is evidence of waiver. Refers to Rup Narain Bhattacharya v. Gopi Nath Mandol (1), Abinash Chandra Bose v. Bama Bewa (2). To give up a right which accrues on the contract, is not varying the terms of the contract. It was a refraining from suing at the request of the debtor, and section 92 of the Evidence Act has no application in a case like this.

Dr. Sarat Chandra Basak, for the Respondents.—There could be no waiver before the instalments actually fell due. It is a clear case of variation of the contract as made by the registered bond. No question of waiver arises in this case and under section 92 of the Evidence Act variation of the contract cannot be proved by oral evidence. Upon the facts found, the Courts below have rightly held that the suit is barred by limitation.

JUDGMENT.

CUTTIE, J.—I have had the advantage of reading the judgment which is about to be delivered by my learned brother and I agree that the appeal must fail. It may now be taken to be settled, so far as this Court is concerned, that mere forbearance to sue is not sufficient proof of waiver on the part of the plaintiff. In this case the plaintiffs feeling that difficulty set up another case that in 1312, when default was first made, they had arranged with the defendants not to insist in the future on the clause in the bond, which provided that on failure of two instalments the whole amount would become due. To this contention there are two objections. The first is one of fact that no such arrangement was pleaded nor was it found by the Courts to have been actually made. What did take place was that in 1312 there was a default and a waiver of the plaintiffs' rights in respect of that default, with the result that further instalments were paid, the last instalment being that for Baisakh 1313. If it be argued that there was such an arrangement with regard to future payments, the answer would be that such an arrangement would amount to a variation of the contract which could only be effected by a writing similar to that of the contract itself, namely, a writing registered. The appeal is dismissed with costs.

WALMSLEY, J.—The plaintiffs prefer this appeal. The defendants, or their predecessors, owed a large sum of money to the firm which is now represented by the plaintiffs, and on Sraban 24th, 1312, they executed a bond by which they agreed to pay Rs. 3,000 by monthly instalments of Rs. 25. The bond was registered. It contained a provision that if the defendants made default in two consecutive months, the creditors should be entitled to sue for the whole amount due under the bond. It is found by the lower Courts that the defendants paid ten instalments only, the last payment being the one made on Baisakh 31st, 1313.

The present suit was instituted on June 13th, 1914 (Jaith 30th, 1321), and is for 72 instalments beginning with the instalment payable for Jaist 1315.

Both the lower Courts have held that the suit is barred by limitation. On this question I need only refer to the case of Girindra Mohun Roy Chowdhury v. Bocha Das (4), where all the earlier cases were considered. According to the view expressed in that judgment, the present suit is barred by limitation, even though the demand is confined to the instalments which would have fallen due in the six years preceding the institution of the suit.

The plaintiffs, however, tried to avoid this difficulty by seeking to prove that in Asvin 1312 there was an oral undertaking on their part, made at the request of the defendants, to waive their right to enforce payment of the whole on two successive defaults. The lower Courts have held that evidence of such an oral undertaking is barred by section 92 of the Evidence Act, and if the effect of the undertaking was to modify the original registered contract they are correct.

It is now urged for the plaintiffs that the undertaking did not modify the contract, and that it amounted to nothing more than a promise on their part to show indulgence to the defendants as long as they chose to do so. Assuming that such was the effect of the undertaking, it seems to me that the plaintiffs are not in any better position. If it did not have the effect of modifying the original contract, that contract stands intact, and if it is not shown that as a fact the right conferred by the contract was waived, the suit is barred. It is said that the promise explains the subsequent inaction on the part of the plaintiffs and that the right was waived each month as default was committed: but that argument leads the plaintiffs into difficulties: if they did not take action because their promise had deprived them of the right to do so, they are faced by the provisions of section 92 of the Evidence Act; if their right to demand immediate payment of the whole continued undiminished, they have no evidence of waiver to offer except mere forbearance to sue, and a vague promise to show indulgence made before the last payment and the subsequent defaults cannot convert such forbearance into waiver.

(4) 1 Ind. Cas. 49; 36 C. 394; 9 C. L. J. 226; 13 C. W. N. 1004.

I think that the decision of the lower Courts is correct, and that the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

ABDULLA KOYA v. MAVILERI EACHARAN NAIR.

against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif, Quilandi, in Original Suit No. 628 of 1911.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. Govinda Marar, for the Appellant.—The actual Karnavan was the 1st defendant. He had the power to grant the lease and this power was not affected by the fact that, by a delegated authority from 1st defendant, the 2nd defendant was discharging the Karnavan's duties. The arrangement was only tentative and it was open to 1st defendant to resume management when he pleased.

The lower Court was wrong in holding that a lease granted by a Karnavan, to be binding on the Tarwad, must be beneficial to it. The grant of a lease does not amount to an alienation of the property and an improvident lease will only diminish the income whereby the liabilities have to be met. Such a grant may be a ground for dismissing the Karnavan, but the lessee cannot be prejudiced by it. A Karnavan has large discretion in the management of the Tarwad property.

Mr. C. Madhavan Nair, for the Respondents.—The de facto Karnavan only can grant a lease and not the Karnavan who is out of office. A Karnavan has not unlimited discretion in the grant of leases. If he is reckless in management and grants improvident leases prejudicial to the Tarwad, the latter cannot be bound by it.

The Melcharth in this case was granted two years before the prior Kanom term expired. It is, therefore, invalid. Cheria Chirikandan v. Krishnan Nambiar (1), Raman Nambiar v. Raman Nambiar (2) and Moidin Kutti v. Kunhi Koyan (3).

JUDGMENT.—In this case the 1st defendant as Karnavan of the Tarwad granted a Melcharth to the 4th defendant, whereby he empowered him to recover 2 items of property held under 2 leases, the term of one of which had expired and the term of the other would expire in 2 years. This Melcharth has been held by the lower Courts to be invalid apparently on two grounds, that is, (1) that the 2nd defendant was the de facto Karnavan, and (2) that the lease was not beneficial to the Tarwad. As regards the first point it is not disputed that 1st defendant was actually Karnavan, and consequently, although he may have allowed 2nd defendant to discharge the duties of Karnavan, it was open to him to resume the management at any time. On the second point the learned Vakil for the appellant argues that a Karnavan has absolute powers as regards leases, and leases granted by him cannot be questioned on the ground that they are not beneficial to the Tarwad. The Karnavan, by the grant of a lease, does not alienate Tarwad property and although the income of the Tarwad may be diminished by the grant of improvident leases, that is mainly a matter which concerns the Karnavan alone, for it reduces the income out of which he has to meet liabilities. No doubt if a Karnavan habitually grants improvident leases and thereby renders himself unable to fulfil his obligations towards the other members of the Tarwad, this would be a ground for removing him from Karnavastanam, but we do not think that a particular lease can be declared to be invalid as against the lessee merely because it is not proved to be beneficial to the Tarwad. To fetter a Karnavan's discretion in this way would be to render his whole management of the property liable to criticism and reversal at any moment.

It is then argued for the respondent that the grant of this lease, 2 years before the expiry of the term under which the land was held, is ipso facto invalid and reliance is placed on Cheria Chirikandan v. Krishnan Nambiar (1) and Raman Nambiar v. Raman Nambiar (2) and Moidin Kutti v. Kunhi Koyan (3). These cases are, however, only authority for holding that a Melcharth granted by a Karnavan before the expiry of the previous term will not bind his successor, and not that such Melcharths are necessarily invalid ab initio.

In this view we think that the decision of the lower Courts is wrong and in allowance of the second appeal we dismiss the plaintiff's suit with costs throughout.

[This second appeal coming on for hearing on 19th December 1917 in pursuance of the order of this Court, dated the 21st November 1916, the Court delivered the Plaintiff, who was the purchaser of a house in execution of a decree and had obtained formal delivery of possession, brought a suit for actual possession of the house. The claim was contested on the ground that the house claimed was the house of an agriculturist and was, therefore, not liable to sale in execution of a decree in view of the provisions of section 60 (c) of the Code of Civil Procedure:

Held, that the defendant having failed to take the objection in execution of the decree and the sale having become conclusive as between him and the plaintiff, it was not open to him to contend that the sale ought never to have taken place and conveyed no title to the purchaser. [p. 948, col. 1.]

Second appeal from a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Mainpuri, dated the 13th April 1916.

Mr. Baleshwari Prasad, for the Appellant.

Mr. Girdhari Lal Agarwala, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiff-appellant for possession of a house which originally belonged to the defendant-respondent. In execution of a decree obtained against the said defendant the house was sold by auction so far back as the 23rd of November 1910 and it was purchased by the plaintiff. He obtained formal delivery of possession, but as he did not get actual possession he brought the present suit. The claim was contested on the ground that the house claimed was the house of an agriculturist and was, therefore, not liable to sale in execution of a decree in view of the provisions of section 60 (c) of the Code of Civil Procedure. This objection prevailed in the Courts below and the suit was dismissed. The plaintiff has preferred this appeal and he raises two questions.

The first is that the lower Appellate Court ought to have determined whether the house was the house of an agriculturist or was appurtenant to the house of an agriculturist within the meaning of clause (c) of section 60; and secondly, even if the house was of the description mentioned in that clause, whether after the sale and confirmation of sale it was open to the defendant at this stage to question the validity of the sale and the title which the plaintiff had acquired under it. As regards the first point the lower Appellate Court says that it was a fact not disputed that the defendant was a tenant and that the house in dispute was an appurtenance to his tenancy. We must accept this statement of fact as correct and assume that the house in dispute is an appurtenance to the tenancy of an agriculturist as such. If an objection had been taken before the auction-sale it ought not to have been sold, but the question which arises is, whether after the sale and the confirmation of the sale its validity can now be questioned by the defendant as against whom the sale, has become conclusive by reason of its confirmation. Under Order XXI, rule 92, after a sale has taken place and has been confirmed, the auction-purchaser acquires a title to the property. In the present instance no objection to the sale was raised before it took place or at any time. It is not suggested in the pleadings that the defendant-judgment debtor was not aware of the execution proceedings; so that as between him and the auction-purchaser the sale has become conclusive and the auction-purchaser has acquired a vested interest in the property sold. If objection had been raised on behalf of the defendant before the auction sale, the Court would have had jurisdiction to consider and decide whether the property was of the description mentioned in section 60 (c), and if it had decided that the property was liable to sale and no appeal had been preferred against such decision, the sale of the property could never be questioned. In the present case no objection having been taken and the sale having become conclusive as between the parties, it is not open, in our opinion, to the defendant, after the lapse of so many years from the date of the sale, to contend that the sale ought never to have taken place and conveyed no title to the purchaser. This view is supported by the decision of this Court in Uned v. Jas Ram (1) and also by the decision referred to in the judgment in that case. The rulings of the Bombay High Court in Pandurang v. Krishnaji (2) and of the Calcutta High Court in Dwarkanath Pal v. Tarini Sankar Roy (3) are to the same effect. The only case in which a contrary view appears to have been held is the unreported judgment of a Single Judge of this Court in Second Appeal No. 327 of 1910, decided on the 16th of January 1911. In that case the learned Judge held that an objection as to attachment and sale could not be made before the auction sale. We are unable to agree with this view and we do not feel ourselves justified in following that ruling in the face of the other rulings to which we have already referred. The result is that we allow the appeal, set aside the decrees of the Courts below and decree the plaintiff's suit with costs in all Courts.

A suit for recovery of money deposited for a term which is re-payable on demand after the expiry of the term is governed by Article 60 of the Limitation Act, as the money is still left in deposit after the termination of the term. [p. 949, col. 2; p. 950, col. 2.]

'A deposit in the name of one person maral another' means only that the deposit was made on the recommendation or introduction of the latter, and the maral man can neither be regarded as a trustee in respect of the money nor has he a right to operate on it, as by directing the transfer of the deposit in the name of another person [p. 950, col. 1.]

Though a usage has sprung up among Nattukottai Chetties that, when money is deposited on the maral of a third party, it should not be allowed to be drawn out unless with the consent of the intermediary, the usual remedy by suit is open to the depositor when the maral man declines to give his consent, and the hands of the Court are not tied down by the usage. JUDGMENT.

WALLIS, C. J.—Two questions arise in this appeal. The first question is whether the defendants Nos. 1 to 5, with whom the suit deposit was made, were justified in acting on the order of the 6th defendant to transfer the deposit which was in the name of the plaintiff to the name of the plaintiff's wife, because the deposit had been made with them in the plaintiff's name maral the 6th defendant. Maral literally means that the deposit had been made on the recommendation or introduction of the 6th defendant.

CHELLAPPA CHETTY v. SUBRAMANIA CHETTY.

Defendants Nos. 1 to 5 have treated it as if it meant that the money was deposited to the order of the 6th defendant, so that the 6th defendant was authorised to operate on the deposit although it was in the name of the plaintiff. In Appeal No. 17 of 1913 there was some discussion on the meaning of the word maral and it was suggested that it might mean that the money could not be withdrawn by the person in whose name it had been deposited without the consent of the person under whose maral the deposit had been made. Some of the evidence in this case, including the evidence of one of the defendants' own witnesses, goes to show that that is the meaning. Whether that be so or not, the evidence for the defendants Nos. 1 to 5 altogether fails to show that a deposit in the name of one man under the maral of another justifies the firm with whom the money has been deposited in acting on the orders of the person under whose maral the deposit has been made without the authority of the person in whose name the deposit stands. We, therefore, agree with the Subordinate Judge that defendants Nos. 1 to 5 were not justified in transferring this deposit from the name of the plaintiff to the name of the plaintiff's wife and in subsequently transferring it to another firm on the order of the 6th defendant, under whose maral it continued to be when deposited in the name of the plaintiff's wife.

The only other serious question in the case is one of limitation. There is no direct evidence as to the terms upon which this money was deposited, so far as the date of the repayment goes. But in Exhibit I, which is a letter from one member of the defendants' firm to another forwarding a Hundi, Exhibit B, it is said that the money was to be credited in the name of the plaintiff under the maral of the 6th defendant for 6 Thavanais with interest at a rate exceeding the two months' Thavanai interest of E. R. by $\frac{1}{32}$ of a rupee, and Mr. K. Srinivasa Aiyangar has argued that this shows that the agreement was that the money should be deposited for a term of 6 Thavanais and should be repayable at the end of 6 Thavanais, and consequently it was not money deposited under an agreement that it shall be payable on demand, within the meaning of Article 60 of the Limitation Act.

Now in the first place, I do not think that that is the effect of the evidence. The surrounding circumstances show that the money was deposited in the name of a minor and in connection with the marriage of a minor, and it cannot have been the intention of the parties that it should be repayable at the end of 6 Thavanais. The agreement appears to have been that at any rate for 6 Thavanais interest should be payable at a rate exceeding nadappu interest by $\frac{1}{32}$ of a rupee. This is also borne out by the way in which the deposit was dealt with after it had been transferred to the name of the plaintiff's wife, because in Exhibit IX we find that interest is allowed at $\frac{1}{32}$ of a rupee in excess of the nadappu rate for 3 Thavanais and afterwards at the nadappu rate, so that the agreement seems to have been simply that at any rate for 6 Thavanais interest should be paid in excess of the nadappu rate.

Now Mr. Srinivasa Aiyangar contended that it was not open to the plaintiff or those acting on his behalf to demand the money back until the expiration of 6 Thavanais. I am not satisfied that that is so. But on a full consideration of the question, I think it makes no difference. Supposing that the agreement was that the money should be deposited for 6 Thavanais and be not repayable until the end of 6 Thavanais and thereafter that it should remain on deposit payable on demand, I think that that would come within the terms of Article 60 of the Limitation Act, and I need only refer to what I had already said with regard to the history and meaning of this Article in Balakrishnudu v. Narayanasamy Chetty (1), where I pointed out that the Legislature in 1877 treated deposits of money repayable on demand as a special class of loans which ought to have a special starting point. Coming, as I do, to the conclusion that this money was intended to be left on deposit after the expiration of the 6 Thavanais, it seems to me that Article 60 is clearly applicable and, therefore, that the suit is not barred.

KUNJ BIHARI PRASAD v. BASDEO PRASAD.

In other respects, I agree with the Subordinate Judge, and dismiss the appeal with costs.

We do not pronounce any opinion as to the respective rights of the 6th defendant and the other defendants inter se.

SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J.—I entirely agree. Having regard to the fact that the decision in this case rests largely upon the construction to be placed on the Tamil word maral, I wish to add a few words. It is not denied that the natural meaning of the term is "through" or "on the recommendation of." The evidence discussed by the Subordinate Judge shows that it is in this sense that Chetties use the expression. No doubt there is also evidence that a usage has sprung up among Chetties that when money is deposited on the maral of a third party, it should not be allowed to be drawn out unless it be with the consent of the person who is the intermediary. This practice is mainly attributable to the fact that usually third persons intervene to recommend a Bank to a depositor who is a young man and in order that that young man may not waste money, the precaution has been taken by the Banks not to allow him to draw it out unless he has the consent of the maral man. Evidence also shows that where the maral man declines to give his consent the usual remedy by suit is open to the depositor; of course, the hands of the Court are not to be tied down by the usage; the necessity for the consent of the maral man is obviated by a decision authorising the taking away of the money from the Bank and the Bank is safeguarded. The practice and the evidence show that the maral man is neither the trustee in respect of the money nor has he any right to operate on it. This conclusion of mine is supported by the judgment which the learned Chief Justice referred to, namely, the judgment of this Court in Appeal No. 17 of 1913, of which one of the members had very large and considerable practice in litigation among Chetties. It seems to me, therefore, that the money on deposit remained as the money of the plaintiff and the defendants were not justified in allowing it to be deposited first in the name of the plaintiff's wife and subsequently in allowing it to be transferred to another firm.

On the question of limitation, the Subordinate Judge has discussed the evidence and has come to the conclusion that the original condition of the deposit was that it should be drawn out on demand. It may be said that the evidence is not very full or conclusive, but even supposing that the only possible conclusion upon the evidence is as spoken to by the 2nd defendant himself, that there was an agreement that the money should remain with the Bank for a year certain (that is, 6 Thavanas of 2 months each) and that it should be drawn out thereafter on demand, I entirely agree with the learned Chief Justice that Article 60 of the Limitation Act is not made inapplicable by that fact. I think the history of the Article given by the learned Chief Justice in Balakrishnu v. Narayanasamy Chetty (1) clearly shows that in such a case it would still be a case of deposit repayable on demand.

I, therefore, agree in holding that the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Mr. John Jackson and Babu Aditya Prasad, for the Appellant.

Babu Ram Chandra and Mr. A. P. Sen, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—These are cross-appeals arising out of a suit which was filed in the Court of the Munsif of Utraula in the Gonda District. The plaintiff was a minor, one Mahant Basdeo Prasad, and the two defendants were Kunj Bihari Prasad and Jagdish Prasad. The allegations upon which the plaintiff came into Court were that the defendants, who are owners of a house situated on a plot No. 727, situated in the village of Chhapiya, had encroached upon an adjacent plot of land No. 728, which belongs to the plaintiff, by extending their house to the south. It was stated that by reason of this encroachment, which the plaintiff said had been made within two years from the suit, a certain road, leading from the north to the south past the corner of the defendants' house, had been narrowed so as to interfere with the free passage of persons going backwards and forwards to the temple of which the plaintiff is the Mahant. A further allegation was to the effect that along the east and south sides of the house the defendants had erected chhajjas or cornices which projected over plot No. 728 and which constituted a trespass on the plaintiff's property. A third complaint was that the defendants had opened new doors on the east and south sides of their house and that they were in the habit of causing obstruction on the plot No. 728 by placing various articles outside these doors and by tethering cattle and by doing similar other acts. The plaintiff, therefore, prayed for removal of so much of the building of the defendants as encroached upon his plot No. 728. He also prayed for the removal of the chhajjas or cornices and for the closing up of the new doors which the defendants had opened.

The main defence in the case was that the alleged encroachment was no encroachment at all. The defendants stated that the new portion of the house regarding which the plaintiff was complaining had been built some 6 or 7 years before the suit upon the site occupied by old walls. They further claimed that the chhajjas constituted no encroachment or trespass on the plaintiff's land and they also denied that any new doors had been opened. They pleaded in any case that the plaintiff was not entitled to have the doors closed.

On the main question in the case, namely, whether the house of the defendants had been so built as to encroach on plot No. 728, the Court of first instance came to a finding in favour of the plaintiff. The Munsif, however, did not think it necessary to order removal of the entire portion of the defendants' building which encroached upon the plaintiff's land. He ordered a corner of it to be removed so as to remove any obstruction to the road leading from the north to the plaintiff's temple. He held that the chhajja on the east side of the defendants' house interfered with the convenience of passengers and he ordered its removal accordingly. As for the chhajja on the south side of the house he was of opinion that it caused no inconvenience and he refused to make any order for its removal. As for the case about the doors he gave directions that the doors should be closed.

The defendants went in appeal to the District Judge and the plaintiff filed cross-objections. The result was that the learned Judge, differing from the Court of first instance, found that there had been no recent encroachment on the plaintiff's land No. 728. He reversed the order of the first Court directing the removal of a portion of the defendants' building. As regards the chhajjas he affirmed the order of the first Court. As for the case about the doors he was of opinion that the defendants were entitled to open as many doors in their house as they chose and consequently he set aside that portion of the first Court's order which directed the doors to be closed.

Both parties come here in appeal and I deal first with the appeal of the plaintiff No. 392 of 1916. The main question for decision here is with respect to the encroachment alleged to have been made by the defendants on plot No. 728. It is argued that the judgment of the lower Appellate Court is wrong in this respect and that the order of the first Court ought to have been allowed to stand.

Referring to the map which was prepared during the trial in the first Court by a Commissioner Babu Sant Bakhsh, the portion of the defendants' premises which the plaintiff alleges to constitute an encroachment on his land is an oblong delineated in pink on the map and running lengthwise from east to west between the letters D and E. The amount of the encroachment is alleged to be about 8 feet.

Prima facie the finding of the learned District Judge that this portion of the defendants' house is not a fresh encroachment upon the plaintiff's land is a finding of fact which cannot be disturbed in second appeal. It is argued, however, that the learned Judge has not referred to certain important pieces of documentary evidence on the record, which were relied upon in the Court of first instance and which it is argued the learned Judge ought to have dealt with in his judgment, especially as he proposed to interfere with the finding arrived at by the Munsif. For the purpose of arriving at his decision the learned Judge relied principally upon two statements; one of these was the statement of a Commissioner, Babu Satish Chandra, who was appointed to inspect the site. According to his statement the portion of the defendants' house, which is marked pink upon the map, was not a new building, that is to say, Babu Satish Chandra was of opinion that the walls, although new, had been erected upon old foundations. The learned Judge says that to his mind the statement of Babu Satish Chandra on this point is conclusive. He also relied very strongly upon the evidence of an old Qanungo, named Dhanpat Rai, who gave evidence in the case on the defendants' behalf. His story was that in the year 1884 he had been ordered to prepare a map of the boundaries of the plaintiff's plot No. 728. A copy of the map which was prepared by him in that year together with a copy of the khassra which he prepared by way of explaining the map were on the record and the originals were also summoned from the Revenue Court. I have no doubt that if the statement of the Qanungo Dhanpat Rai can be accepted in its entirety, the decision of the learned Judge is correct. The Court of first instance thought, the evidence of the Qanungo was unreliable but the learned Judge, as he was perfectly entitled to do, took the opposite opinion. It is, however, the fact that although the learned Judge in the opening portion of his judgment sets out that he has considered all the oral and documentary evidence in the case, he does not in his judgment discuss certain documentary evidence which it is claimed supports the case of the plaintiff. I have been referred in this connection to three documents. One of these is a map of the abadi of Mauza Chhapiya which was prepared at the time of the Settlement in 1901. This map is relied on by the plaintiff for the purpose of showing that at the time when it was prepared the road at the south-east corner of the defendants' house was some 13 odd feet wide. According to the Commissioner's map prepared during the trial in the first Court the road is now only $7\frac{1}{2}$ feet wide, and so it is claimed that this constitutes clear evidence of the fact that the original boundary of the defendants' house has been advanced to the south so as to narrow the width of the road to about half of its previous extent. Another map to which I am referred is Exhibit 4, a partition map which was prepared in the year 1892. If we accept the measurements shown on this map, the total length of the eastern wall of the defendants' house from north to south was at that time only about 82.5 feet. According to the map now prepared by the Commissioner the total length would be 92 feet, thus showing that the southern boundary had been advanced by a distance of over 5 feet. This latter map was examined by the Munsif. He was not prepared to rely on it exclusively as proof of the encroachment, saying that he could not trust a map of such a small scale for the purpose of coming to a definite conclusion in the plaintiff's favour. So far as the Settlement Map of 1901 is concerned, I have to observe that it is on a very small scale and that it would be practically impossible to hold that it proves conclusively that the space between the width of the road at the south-east corner of the defendants' house was 13 feet odd. Being on a small scale the minutest error in making a copy of the map or in taking measurements by it would lead to false conclusions. The difference of a pin's point in making a measurement would correspond to an error of perhaps 8 or 10 feet on the ground. As regards the partition map of 1892 it supports to a certain extent the case of the plaintiff. It is a map on a larger scale than the map which was prepared in 1901. At the same time there is this much to be observed that the road regarding which the complaint is now made is not delineated upon this particular map. The corner of the tank which faces the south-east corner of the defendants' house is not shown on this map. On the other hand, it seems to me that the statement of the Qanungo which the learned Judge has accepted is entitled to preference as against these pieces of evidence. We have the fact that the Qanungo was deputed for the purpose of defining the boundaries of plot No. 728 which is the plaintiff's property. We have it also that he prepared a map, that he set up boundary pillars and that he had prepared a khasra explaining the map. These documents were before the Qanungo at the time he gave his evidence. The result of the Qanungo's statement is that in the year 1884 the southern boundary of the defendants' house extended south of the pillar No. 15 which he set up on that occasion. He states quite clearly that this particular pillar was not at the south-east corner of the defendants' house but was some distance north of that corner. Another important fact to which he deposes is that according to the correct measurements the north-west corner of plot No. 728 was found to be inside the defendants' house; in other words, in the year 1884 an encroachment had already been made and a portion of plot No. 728 had been built over by the defendants. He explains that for the purpose of marking the north-west corner of plot No. 728 he set up a pillar No. 1 at a spot outside the defendants' house and one gatta south of the correct spot, the reason being that he was unable to set up a boundary pillar inside the defendants' premises. He has further stated in his evidence that the line between pillar No. 15 and pillar No. 1 ran due east and west. If this be so, then it seems to me that comparing his statement with the map of the Commissioner which I have now before me it must be held that the portion of the defendants' house delineated in pink was in existence, though possibly, not in the same form, in the year 1884.

I have given all this evidence my careful attention and the conclusion I arrive at is that the plaintiff failed to establish that the portion of the defendants' house delineated in pink constituted a fresh encroachment which he was entitled to have removed. I think the proper conclusion is that the encroachment had taken place so far back as the year 1884. The judgment of the lower Appellate Court on this point must, I think, be supported.

The next question I have to deal with is that of the chhajjas. It is fairly obvious that these chhajjas, which admittedly are of recent construction, constitute a trespass on the plaintiff's land No. 728. The learned Judge concedes that the maxim "cuius est solum, ejus est usque ad cælum" applies to the case and if that be so, it seems to me to necessarily follow that the chhajja on the south side of the defendants' premises constitutes just as much a trespass as does the chhajja on the east side, though it may be the fact that it does not cause so much inconvenience. It is not to be doubted that the plaintiff is entitled to relief in respect of this chhajja on the south side, for as the learned Counsel observes, if this chhajja is allowed to remain for a period of 20 years, the defendants will acquire a right of easement. The question was not to be determined merely upon considerations of convenience. Once it was found that the trespass had been committed and that the effects of the trespass could be removed it was the duty of the Courts, I think, to give the plaintiff relief; and I am therefore, of opinion that the Courts below should have passed an order for the removal of the chhajja on the south side.

Lastly there remains the question of the doors. The learned Counsel for the plaintiff-appellant admits that he is not entitled to ask that the doors should be closed, but he says that he is entitled to an order restraining the defendants from using these doors for any purpose other than those of ingress and egress and from using the land outside their house for the purpose of tethering cattle or causing any other obstruction to the free use of the land by the plaintiff. It seems to me that this argument cannot be controverted and I think the plaintiff was entitled to this relief. So much for the plaintiff's appeal.

The appeal of the defendants (No. 367 of 1916) relates to the eastern chhajja the demolition of which has been ordered by the Court below. As to this my opinion is, for the reasons already given above, that the defendants have no case at all. The chhajja undoubtedly constitutes a trespass and the plaintiff is certainly entitled to have this erection removed.

The result, therefore, is that I allow the appeal of the plaintiff-appellant in part and order the decree of the lower Appellate Court to be varied by the insertion of a direction for the removal of the chhajja along the south side of the defendants' house within three months from the date of this decree. I further give the plaintiff-appellant an injunction restraining the defendants from using the doors of their house for any other purposes than ingress and egress and directing the defendants not to use the ground on the east or south side of their house for the purpose of tethering cattle or to cause any other obstruction to the free use by the plaintiff of the land in question. As for the defendants' appeal I order it to be dismissed. I leave the parties to bear their own costs.

Appeal No. 367 dismissed;
Appeal No. 392 partly allowed.

Mortgage suit—Prior mortgage paid off by purchaser of equity of redemption—Lien of purchaser not recognised in final decree—Suit, separate, to enforce lien, maintainability of—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 11, 47—Res judicata.

Defendant brought a suit on a mortgage against the plaintiff, who was the purchaser of the equity of redemption of the mortgaged property and had paid off a prior mortgage. The plaintiff set up the prior mortgage as a shield and the preliminary decree recognised his lien. But no mention of his lien was made in the final decree and the property was sold and purchased by the defendant, who took possession of it without discharging the plaintiff's lien. The plaintiff thereupon applied to be put in possession of the property until his lien was discharged. The application was rejected and plaintiff then brought a suit to recover the amount of his lien.

Held, that the suit was barred both by the principle of res judicata and by section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code. [p. 956, col. 2.]

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Agra, reversing that of the Subordinate Judge, Muttra.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this case are as follows:—The property in dispute was owned by one Kallan. There was an usufructuary mortgage upon it for the sum of Rs. 290. It was subsequently mortgaged to Banke Lal, the defendant, under two deeds dated the 20th of February 1895 for Rs. 150 and 27th of June 1895 for Rs. 150. The property, i.e., the equity of redemption, was subsequently sold in execution of a decree on the 25th of March 1900 and was purchased by the plaintiff, Moti Ram. In that year 1900, Banke Lal brought a suit on his first deed of the 20th of February 1895 for sale of the property and he joined Moti Ram as a defendant. In this suit Banke Lal mentioned the prior usufructuary mortgage and the fact that Rs. 290 thereon was due to Mathura Prasad, the mortgagee. He offered to pay

this sum. He prayed for a decree for sale. He paid off the Rs. 290. His decree was dated the 16th of July 1900 and he got a final decree for sale on the 23rd of February 1901. In neither of these decrees was there any specific mention of the sum of Rs. 290, but it was actually paid into Court by Banke Lal and was withdrawn by the prior mortgagee in July 1901. The property was not sold as Moti Ram came to terms with Banke Lal. A certain sum of money was paid down in 1901 and other sums were paid on subsequent dates up to the year 1904, when the full claim of Rs. 737 odd was paid off by Moti Ram. This included the sum of Rs. 290 mentioned above. In 1909 Banke Lal brought a suit on the basis of his second mortgage, dated the 27th of June 1895, and he asked for sale of this property. Moti Ram was impleaded as a defendant. He proceeded to hold up as a shield his rights which had accrued to him by payment of the sum due on the two prior mortgages mentioned above, i.e., the sum of Rs. 737 odd. In his defence he made a mistake in figures, but it was finally admitted that the sum which he had paid was Rs. 737 odd. His case was that the plaintiff Banke Lal had no right to sell this property without first paying off to him the above-mentioned sum. The Court in its judgment held that he was legally entitled to hold up this shield; and it held further that the property could only be sold "subject to his lien," (whatever the Judge may have meant thereby). A preliminary decree for sale was drawn up and mention of the lien was entered therein. The decreeholder Banke Lal applied for his final decree in accordance with the preliminary decree. Notice was issued to Moti Ram. He did not appear. A final decree was drawn up, which was simply an order for the sale of the property without mentioning Moti Ram's lien in any way. The property was then put to sale in execution of the decree and was purchased by Banke Lal himself. Banke Lal did not deposit any sum for payment to Moti Ram. He applied for possession as auction-purchaser and in May 1912 was put into possession by the Court. Thereupon Moti Ram made an application to the Court, pointing out that the money had not been paid to him and asking that he might be replaced in possession of the property until the money had been paid. The Court held that it could not go into this matter in the course of the execution of the decree and that if Moti Ram had any remedy he must seek it by a separate suit, hence the suit out of which this appeal has arisen. Moti Ram has claimed to recover the sum of Rs. 737 plus interest from Banke Lal by sale of the property in question. The Court of first instance decreed the claim. The lower Appellate Court dismissed it as being barred by limitation. It held that Moti Ram was driven to sue upon the two original mortgages and as they dated back to 1895 in the one case and prior to that in the other, the suit was barred by limitation.

The pleas taken before us are, first of all, that the present suit is a suit to enforce a liability created by the judgment which was passed between the parties in Banke Lal's second suit; that Article 122 applies, and that the suit is within time. In the alternative it is urged that it is a suit to enforce a charge under Article 132; that no charge arose in favour of the plaintiff until the decision of the suit or at least until the years 1901 to 1904 when he paid the money; since which time there have been certain acknowledgments of liabilities made by Banke Lal, which under section 19 of the Limitation Act would operate to extend limitation. There has been a great deal of discussion over the meaning of sections 74 and 101 of the Transfer of Property Act, but we do not think that they are at all relevant to the point that we have to decide. Section 101 of the Transfer of Property Act does not apply to the case in question. Moti Ram was not the owner of a charge or encumbrance who had become absolutely entitled to the property. He was a person who had become entitled to the property by auction-purchase; who subsequently paid off two prior mortgages and when he was sued by Banke Lal, he, by the application of equitable principles, was entitled to hold up the payments that he had made as a shield and to demand that Banke Lal should repay to him that sum before he could oust him from the property. The judgment in the suit between him and Banke Lal did not create a liability. It merely declared the right of Moti Ram and did not create it. We do not think that Article 122 has any application to the facts of the present suit. In both the Courts below the defendant raised the plea that this suit was barred by the provisions of section 47 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The first Court dismissed this plea in two lines. The lower Appellate Court did not touch it. It has been raised and discussed before us. We have summoned the Collector's record of the sale proceedings in order to satisfy ourselves as to what took place therein between the parties; but it has been of no assistance, as the proclamation of sale is not to be found in it. If this suit were treated as one upon the original mortgages, it would be barred by limitation. It clearly cannot be treated as a suit based upon the previous judgment and to enforce a liability created thereby, and Article 122 of the Limitation Act does not apply. Nor does Article 132 apply. Even if it did, the bar of limitation would still be there as we have not been able to find the alleged acknowledgments.

The plaintiff's present position is due to his own negligence. He was duly impleaded in Banke Lal's last suit and he rightly raised the plea that the property could not be sold until the sum of Rs. 737 had been paid to him. The Court passed a wrong decree directing the property to be sold subject to his lien. It ought to have directed Banke Lal to pay the money before he put the property to sale. The plaintiff remained satisfied with that decree.

If we assume that the Court meant by the words "subject to the lien of Moti Ram" that the money was to be paid before the property was sold, then Moti Ram has been most negligent. Even when the final decree was prepared, he did not appear to see that the decree was properly drawn up and as a matter of actual fact it omitted all mention of his rights.

When the decree was put into execution and notice issued to him, he did not appear and the property was sold and possession awarded. He then came into Court and asked to be re-placed into possession. The Court refused his plea and he did not appeal.

It is clear that no separate suit will now lie. The matter was one that ought to have been raised and actually was raised between the parties in the previous litigation and Moti Ram asked for the relief to which he was entitled, viz., that the property should not be sold until he had been paid off. The Court's decree did not in terms grant him that relief. If its decree be taken as a refusal to grant the relief he cannot now sue for it again.

If it be taken as having granted him that relief, he ought to have enforced it in the execution department and no separate suit will lie. If the present suit be treated as an application in the execution proceedings, he is met with the fact that the final decree is silent on the point and no attempt has been made to make it agree with the preliminary decree. If that error be now amended, he will then be met with the fact that when notice was issued to him he took no objection and when after the property had been sold he came into Court and the Court refused to give him his relief in those proceedings, he remained satisfied with that order. The principle of the rule of res judicata must be applied. He ought to have appealed and obtained his relief then and there. He cannot re-open the point again by a fresh application in the execution proceedings. We can see no way of giving him relief now, and he has merely himself and his own negligence to thank for his present difficulty.

The appeal must fail and we dismiss it. In the circumstances of the case, however, we order the parties to bear their own costs of this appeal.

Appeal dismissed.

XXI, r. 43—Execution—Attachment of cattle—Supratdar, liability of, whether can be enquired into by executing Court.

The liability of a supratdar or depositary of property attached in execution of a decree who has made default, cannot be enquired into by the executing Court but must form the subject of a separate suit.

Application for revision of the order of the Munsif, Yeotmal, dated the 26th November 1917, in Execution Case in Civil Suit No. 162 of 1917.

Mr. W. H. Dhabe, for the Applicant.

Mr. Atmaram Bhagwant, for the Non-Applicant.

ORDER.—The question raised in this petition of revision is whether the liability, if any, of the non-applicant No. 1 can be enforced by an order of the executing Court. The non-applicant was a Supratdar or depositary of cattle attached under Order XXI, rule 43, and entrusted to him in accordance with Circular I-31 on his executing a security bond to the extent of the value of the said livestock for its production in good condition when required. The applicant who had applied for rateable distribution, after an attachment of the cattle at the instance of another decree-holder, complains that the cattle had been returned without the order of the Court to the judgment-debtor who had compromised with the attaching creditor, and whose compromise was certified to the Court. The Munsif has held that the matter cannot be enquired into by the executing Court but must form the subject of a regular suit.

For the applicant reliance is placed upon Nathoo Ram v. Kamal Ram (1), where Obbard, J. C., held that the Court has an inherent power to enforce a security-bond given under similar circumstances. This case, however, was dissented from by Ismay, J. C., in Joshi Powar v. Jiwraj Hazarimal (2). Both these cases were decided under the Code of 1882. The applicant's Pleader relies upon section 151 of the present Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1903) as supporting the view taken by Obbard, J. C.

Section 151 runs thus:—

"Nothing in this Code shall be deemed to limit or otherwise affect the inherent power of the Court to make such orders as may be necessary for the ends of justice or to prevent abuse of the process of the Court".

The terms of the section are very wide and if an order can be passed under this section to enforce the depositary's liability, that order will not obviously be a decree and will not be open to appeal.

Section 145 of the Civil Procedure Code deals with the liability of a surety. It is clear that the Supratdar was not a surety for the judgment-debtor. It may, however, be noted that section 145 declares that the surety shall, for the purposes of the appeal, be deemed a party within the meaning of section 47.

Order XL, rule 4, enables the Court to enforce the duties of a Receiver by directing his property to be attached and sold. It is clear that the Supratdar in this case was not appointed a Receiver. An appeal lies under Order XLIII, rule 1 (s), from such an order. In both these instances where proceedings may be taken for the enforcement of the liability of a person other than the parties to the suit, an appeal has been given by law. In Nathoo Ram v. Kamal Ram (1) the Court declined to say whether the order was appealable or not, and whether, if unjust, it could be impeached by a separate suit.

The mode in which the liability of the depositary is to be enforced has also been considered in that case. There being no decree, the depositary's property cannot be attached and sold in the absence of a statutory power as now contained in Order XL, rule 4. It has also been pointed out by Ismay, J. C., that the refusal of the depositary to deliver up the attached property cannot be summarily dealt with in the Mofussil as a contempt of Court. For these reasons I agree with the later ruling in Joshi Powar v. Jiwraj Hazarimal (2), and dismiss this application for revision with costs. I fix Rs. 10 as Pleader's fees in this Court.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), ss. 249, 251, 261, 263—Partnership—Contract by partners—Debt contracted after death of partner by surviving partner for performance of contract—Estate of deceased partner, liability of—Remedy of creditor.

Per Wallis, C. J.—Section 263 of the Contract Act cannot override the express provisions of section 261. [p. 959, col. 2.]

Per Seshagiri Aiyar, J.—Unhampered by authority, the plain interpretation of sections 251, 261 and 263 of the Contract Act read together would seem to be that a deceased partner's estate would be liable for obligations necessitated by the process of winding up the partnership business. The implication of section 261 seems to be that the estate should not be answerable for fresh liabilities created solely after the death of the partner. It is difficult to construe section 263 as not dealing with devolution caused by the death of a partner. The expression "partners" in that section must mean those who constituted the partnership before it was dissolved by the death of one of them and prima facie in the case of dissolution by death the same liability would attach as before death, provided the obligation was incurred for winding up the business. [p. 959, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.

WALLIS, C. J.—The main question argued in this appeal is as to the liability of the defendants Nos. 2 and 3, the representatives of a deceased partner of the 1st defendant, for an advance of Rs. 2,301 made by the plaintiff to the 1st defendant after his partner's death to enable him to take up bills of lading for, and obtain delivery of, goods which had been ordered by the partners during the lifetime of the deceased partner but did not come forward until after his death. While section 249, Indian Contract Act, makes any partner liable for all debts and obligations incurred while he is a partner in the usual course of, business by or on behalf of the partnership, section 261 provides that the estate of a partner who has died is not, in the absence of an express agreement, liable in respect of any obligation incurred by the firm after his death. The debt now sued for was an obligation incurred by the firm after his death and, therefore, is covered by the section. It is true that it was incurred by the surviving partner to enable him to perform a contract entered into during the lifetime of the deceased partner, but this is not enough to take it out of the section. Section 263, no doubt, provides that "after a dissolution of partnership the rights and obligations of the partners continue in all things necessary for the winding up the business of the partnership", but these provisions cannot override the express provisions of section 261 that obligations created by the firm after the death of the deceased partner are not binding on his estate. "It may be taken as a general proposition that the estate of a deceased partner is not liable to third parties, for what may be done after his decease by the surviving partners." Lindley on Partnership, Bk. IV, Chap. 3, s. 2, page 708 (8th Edition). Section 9 of the Partnerships Act, 1890, makes the estate of a deceased partner liable in a due course of administration for all debts and obligations of the firm incurred while he was a partner. At Common Law the estate of a deceased partner was not entitled to the benefit of, or liable under, partnership contracts, and equity seems only to have imposed a liability in the case of contracts entered into by the partnership in the lifetime of the deceased partner. It has been held under section 9 of the Partnership Act in Bagel v. Miller (1) that the representatives of a deceased partner could not be sued in a County Court together with the surviving partner for the price of goods ordered by the partnership during his lifetime but not delivered till after his death on the ground that the obligation to pay was not incurred while he was a partner, though, apparently, the Court considered some other remedy was available against his representatives on the contract to purchase made during his lifetime, as to which see M'Clean v. Kennard (2). In this case the suit debt was binding on the partnership assets, which the first surviving partner had power to pledge in discharge of it, and I think, as regards the amount in question, the decree must be against the 1st defendant personally and against the partnership assets in his hands. We modify the decree accordingly and dismiss the appeal in other respects. Parties to pay and receive proportionate costs throughout.

SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J.—I agree. The short and interesting point raised by Mr. Venkatarama Sastriar is res integra in this country and has very meagre authority in favour of it in England. The facts are that a firm consisting of two partners ordered goods during the lifetime of both of them. After consignment and before delivery one of them died. The survivor borrowed money to honour the bill of lading and took possession of the goods. The lender now sues to enforce the liability on the assets of the partnership as well as on the properties of the deceased partner. The learned Vakil for the legal representatives of the deceased partner contends that the estate is not liable. The sections of the Indian Contract Act bearing on the point are sections 251, 261 and 263. As regards section 251 it is not denied that the honouring of the bill of lading and the acceptance of the goods are acts "necessary for or usually done in carrying on the business." Therefore, if the co-partner were alive he and his estate would have been bound. Section 261 refers to obligations incurred after the death of the partner and expressly exempts the estate of the deceased from liability for such obligations. In this case the obligation to pay for and to accept the goods was incurred during the lifetime of the deceased partner. It is true that the borrowing was after but the borrowing, in my opinion, is only the substitution of a new liability for an existing one and not the creation of a fresh liability. The implication of the section seems to be that the estate should not be answerable for fresh liabilities created solely after the death of the partner. Then comes section 263. It is difficult to construe this section as not dealing with devolution caused by the death of a partner. The expression partners must mean those who constituted the partnership before it was dissolved by the death of one of them and prima facie in cases of dissolution by death, the same liability would attach as before death, provided the obligation was incurred for winding up the business. It cannot seriously be argued that the acceptance of the goods ordered and their payment were not necessary for winding up the business. Consequently, subject to the special apportionment of liability between private debts and partnership debts mentioned in section 262, it seems fairly clear, from the language of section 263, that the deceased partner's estate would be liable for obligations necessitated by the process of winding up the business. Unhampered by authority, this seems to be the plain interpretation of the sections referred to.

Mr. Venkatarama Sastriar relied strongly on Bagel v. Miller (1) for his contention already referred to. The decision certainly supports him. The learned Chief Justice, Lord Alverstone, says: "There may be an obligation, but not the obligation alleged in the present case." Section 9 of English Partnership Act, on which the decision is based, provides that "after his death his estate is also severally liable in a due course of administration for such debts and obligations." The judgment may be said to have proceeded upon the unsustainability of the form of action commenced by the plaintiff, and not on a denial of the liability of the estate of the deceased partner to contribute. The observation of Channel, J., "The plaintiff's remedy is not by means of an action for goods sold and delivered" supports this suggestion. But the weight of authority is against restricting the principle of the Lord Chief Justice's decision to forms of action alone. Lord Lindley at page 708 says:—"With respect to the direct liability of the assets of the deceased to creditors, it may be taken as a general proposition that the estate of the deceased partner is not liable to third parties for what may be done after his decease by the surviving partners".

In 22 Halsbury in the note to paragraph 47 the law is thus stated: "But though he has authority to pledge the partnership property, this does not enable him to bind his partners personally". The authority quoted for this proposition, namely, Blaine v. Holland (3), does not support it. Pollock in his Digest of the Law of Partnership puts the above statement of the law as an illustration to section 9 of the Partnership Act. Sir H. H. Shephard in his commentaries upon sections 261 and 263 of the Contract Act inclines to the view that the estate would not be liable. It must be stated that there is practically no difference in language between the sections of the English Partnership Act and those of the Indian Contract Act on this ground.

As I felt considerable doubt on the question, with diffidence, I examined the American Law on the subject. In 30 Cyclopædia of Law and Procedure, page 634, it is mentioned, "As a rule, however, the estate of the deceased partner cannot be made directly liable to third persons by the contracts of the survivor." In this state of authorities, I feel compelled to hold that the contention of the learned Vakil for the appellant should be accepted. The result of this view would be to restrict the operation of section 263 so as to give the surviving partner alone, and not the creditor, a right to proceed against the estate of the deceased partner in regard to an obligation incurred for winding up the business of the partnership. This does not, in my opinion, stand in the way of the creditor proceeding against the assets of the partnership. The surviving partner is before the Court, and he represents the partnership effectually, and a decree against him can be executed against the assets of the partnership in his hands. I would modify the decree by directing that for the sum of Rs. 2,300 and odd borrowed after the death of the husband of the 2nd defendant, the assets of the partnership in the hands of the 1st defendant would be alone liable. The latter will also be personally liable as mentioned by the learned Chief Justice. I agree in the order as to costs.

GUR BAKSH SINGH v. CHUTTA SINGH.

Syed Nabi Ullah, for the Applicants.

Mr. A. P. Sen and Babu Manni Lal, for the Opposite party.

JUDGMENT.—On the 10th September 1917 a reference to arbitration was made by certain persons in regard to certain matters in dispute between them relating to the property left by Musammat Rani, the widow of Tilak Singh. Four arbitrators were appointed, two of whom were described as panches and the other two as sarpanches, with a provision that whatever award was made by them would be binding on the parties to the reference. On the 23rd November 1917 an award was made by three of the persons above referred to. The award did not state whether the fourth arbitrator Lachhman Prasad had joined in the arbitration or not. On the 1st December 1917 Arjun Singh and certain other persons, who were parties to the reference, applied under paragraph 17, Schedule II, of the Code of Civil Procedure for the filing of the agreement of reference to arbitration, no mention having been made therein of the fact that an award had already been made. The application mentioned that four arbitrators had been appointed, one of whom was to act as sarpanch or head arbitrator, but it did not state that the award was to be made by a majority, if the remaining arbitrators did not agree. The defendants denied having executed the said agreement and pleaded inter alia that there was no formal sitting or enquiry by the arbitrators, that two of the arbitrators made an award and got the third to sign it, that the fourth arbitrator refused to join in the arbitration or to sign the award and that the said award was invalid on account of misconduct of the arbitrators and the failure of two of them to join in the same. The applicants subsequently admitted that an award had been made by three of the arbitrators and asked the Court to file the award and to pass a decree in accordance with it, treating the award as having been made by a majority of the arbitrators. They asserted that the parties had agreed at the time the agreement was executed that an award by a majority of the arbitrators would be valid and binding. They wanted to produce evidence in support of that contention, but the Court below held that oral evidence inconsistent with the agreement could not be admitted.

In the United Kingdom Mutual Steamship Assurance Association v. Houston (1) it was held that where a matter was referred for decision to three arbitrators, all three must concur in the making of the award and that the award made by only two of them could not be treated as valid. In Lala v. Abdus Samed (2) it was similarly ruled that on a reference to several arbitrators together, where there was no clause providing for an award made by less than all being valid, each of them must act personally in performance of the duties of his office, as if he were the sole arbitrator. The effect of these decisions is to lay down that an agreement must be taken for what it is worth, and that, if it does not mention that an award by a majority would be valid, the award should be made by all the arbitrators unanimously. Section 92, proviso 2, of the Evidence Act permits evidence to be given as to the existence of any separate oral agreement in regard to any matter on which a document is silent and which is not inconsistent with its terms. But in considering whether or not any of those provisions applies, the Court has to take into consideration the degree of formality of the document concerned.

The agreement in the present case comprises all the terms and covenants governing the arbitration. It states that whatever decision is given by the arbitrators, panches and sarpanches included, shall be acceptable to and be binding on the parties. The suggestion that there was a contemporaneous separate oral agreement to the effect that the decision of a majority would be binding is obviously inconsistent with the tenor of the agreement, which had been reduced to writing, and the production of oral evidence to vary that agreement cannot be permitted. The award was, therefore, on the face of it a nullity.

The matter cannot be referred back now to the same arbitrators, because as laid down in Mustafa Khan v. Phulja Bibi (3), the powers of the Court in a proceeding under paragraph 20 Schedule II, of the Code of Civil Procedure are exhausted as soon as the Court decides either to file the award or refuses to file it. In regard to an agreement of reference to arbitration dealt with in paragraph 17, Schedule II, of the Code, the situation is somewhat different. The applicants admitted soon after an application was made under that paragraph that it was irregular, inasmuch as an award had already been made before the application was filed. The Court below treated the subsequent proceeding as one under paragraph 20, Schedule II, of the Code and refused to file the award. From that order an appeal lay under section 104 of the Code. The present application for revision is, therefore, irregular.

The application is accordingly dismissed with costs.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Arts. 169, 176—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXII, r. 3—Appeal—Death of respondent—Notice not served on representative—Appeal decreed ex parte—Application for re-hearing—Limitation—Death of appellant—Appeal dismissed for default—Application to bring representative on record Procedure.

The pre-emptor and the vendee both appealed from a decree in a pre-emption suit. Before the appeals could be heard the vendee died, and his appeal was dismissed for default. The pre-emptor applied to bring the representative of the deceased vendee on the record. The application was granted, but before the notice could be served on the representative the pre-emptor's appeal was decreed ex parte. The vendee's representative thereupon made an application (a) for setting aside the ex parte decree in the pre-emptor's appeal and (b) for getting himself substituted on the record as appellant in his father's place:

Held, (1) that no notice having been served on the applicant, limitation for the application for re-hearing the appeal which had been decreed ex parte commenced from the date on which the applicant had knowledge of the decree: [p 962, col. 2.]

(2) that as the deceased vendee could not make default, his representative had the usual period of six months for applying to be brought on to the record, the order of dismissal for default being inappropriate and inoperative as a bar. [p. 963, col. 1.]

Miscellaneous appeal from the order of the District Judge, Multan, dated the 14th November 1916.

Mr. Hargopal, for the Appellant.

Mr. Cooper, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This judgment will cover the connected Appeal No. 2805 of 1917. Jagat Ram plaintiff sued for pre-emption and the first Court passed a decree for possession on payment of a certain sum. Both plaintiff and the vendee lodged appeals. On the 14th November 1916 the vendee's appeal was dismissed, as neither he nor his Pleader was present.

On the same day the plaintiff lodged an application saying the vendee had died in October 1916 and that his son Daulat Rai should be brought on to the record as his representative. This was granted, and notice issued but was not served. Notice again issued, and then the plaintiff's appeal was accepted ex parte on 9th January 1917, though notice to Daulat Rai had not yet returned and was afterwards received back unserved.

On 13th March 1917 Daulat Rai applied through Amir Chand, Pleader, (1) for setting aside the ex parte decree and (2) for getting himself brought on to the record as appellant in his father's place.

The District Judge holds that the former application is time-barred, and that the latter is futile as such an application can only apply to pending suits or appeals.

The District Judge overlooks that where notice has not been served, limitation for an application for re-hearing the appeal dates from the time when the applicant had knowledge of the decree, see Article 169. And as to the other application I need only refer to the Privy Council ruling, Debi Bakhsh Singh v. Habib Shah (1), as authority for holding that a dead man is not a defaulter, and that in such a case the representative can get the usual period of six months for applying to be brought on to the record, the order of dismissal for default being inappropriate and inoperative as a bar.

The District Judge also held that the applications had not been put in by a proper agent, but Lala Amir Chand was instructed by Naunidh Rai, who is Daulat Rai's general agent.

I accept both these appeals, and set aside the orders under appeal and also the order of the District Judge, dated the 14th November 1917, dismissing Jetha Nand's appeal and his order of 9th January 1917 accepting Jagat Ram's appeal.

The District Judge will first pass an order bringing Daula Rai on to the record as appellant in place of his deceased father, and will then hear both appeals and dispose of them on the merits.

Stamp on appeals to this Court to be refunded; other costs of appeal to this Court to be costs in the cause.

Appeal accepted.

Will—Execution, proof of—Presumption—Sound disposing mind, what is—Burden of proof.

A plaintiff who sets up a title under a Will must satisfy the Court that the Will was "duly executed", that is to say, he must furnish proof of execution which carries with it a conviction that the testator knew and approved of the contents of the instrument. This involves the proposition that he was a free and capable testator. The ordinary rule is that the execution of a Will by a competent testator raises a presumption that he knew and approved of the contents of the Will; and ordinarily the competency of the testator is presumed, if nothing appears to rebut the ordinary presumption. But where the mental capacity of the testator is challenged by evidence, it is the duty of the Court to find whether upon the evidence it is established that the testator was of sound disposing mind and did know and approve of the contents of the Will. In order to constitute what is known in law as "a sound disposing mind," it must be shown that the testator was able to understand his position, able to appreciate his property and able to form a judgment with respect to the parties whom he chose to benefit. Appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Tahsil Mohanlalganj, Lucknow, dated the 18th March 1916.

The Hon'ble Syed Wazir Hasan, Messrs. Mohammad Nasim and Mohammad Wasim, for the Appellant.

Mr. St. George Jackson, Babus Sita Ram, Harnam Sunder Lal Varma and Pandit Shiva Narain Shukla, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The appellant in this case, Raj Bachan Singh, was the defendant in the Court below to a suit for declaration brought by the plaintiff-respondent Shatranji alias Bhanwar Lalji.

The plaintiff is a minor, his age at the time of the institution of the suit being ten years, and the purpose of the suit was to obtain a declaration of the plaintiff's right to certain property specified in the plaint—a right which he alleged he derived under a Will executed by his maternal grandfather Raj Gobardhan Singh.

The property in dispute admittedly forms part of what was known originally as the Bhira Estate in the Kheri district. A reference to List No. 1 prepared under section 8 of the Oudh Estates Act (Act I of 1859) shows that the Bhira Estate was conferred upon four persons, one of whom was Raj Sadho Singh. It is admitted that Raj Gobardhan Singh was the son of Raj Sadho Singh, and it further appears that subsequent to the date of the grant the estate was divided up into several portions. It is not now denied that at the time of his death Raj Gobardhan Singh was in possession of four portions of the Bhira Estate, which are described in the proceedings as Taluqas or Taluqdari Mahals. The names of these Taluqas are set out as being Bijua, Ramnagar, Daulatpur and Nighasan.

The estate as originally granted was a List No. IV estate, the rule of succession being that where the owner dies intestate the property descends according to the ordinary law to which members of the intestate's tribe and religion are subject.

Raj Gobardhan Singh had no male issue. He had an only daughter Musammatt Raj Kunwar alies Bitto Saheb, who was married in the month of April 1903 to Maharaj Kunwar Sardar Singhji, the second son of the Ruling Chief of Shahpura in Rajputana. This lady gave birth to a son, the plaintiff in the present case, in the month of June 1904. She died in July of the same year about a month after the birth of the child. Gobardhan Singh died in March 1905, leaving three widows Rani Suraj Kunwar, Rani Devi Kunwar and Rani Dammar Kumari Devi. It is proved that shortly after the death of Raj Gobardhan Singh mutation in respect of the immoveable estate left by him was made in favour of two of these Raniis, namely, the senior and the junior Raniis. These ladies were placed in possession of 80 villages each, constituting the estate which had been left by their husband, and the order for mutation was passed in accordance with the terms of a Will purporting to be the Will of Raj Gobardhan Singh which was produced in the Revenue Courts in the month of June 1905. The plaintiff in this suit claims that under the Will in question he has a vested interest in the property left by Raj Gobardhan Singh and that he has the right to succeed as absolute owner of the property on the death of the survivor of the widows of Raj Gobardhan Singh. It may be mentioned here that since the death of Raj Gobardhan Singh one of his widows, who is described as the "manjhli" (middle) Rani, has died. Under the terms of the Will she took no share in the estate, but was entitled to a grant of maintenance at the rate of Rs. 250 a month.

The Will left by Raj Gobardhan Singh also contains a bequest in favour of the defendant-appellant Raj Bachan Singh to take effect on the determination of the life-estates created in favour of the widows. It is not disputed that Raj Bachan Singh is the nearest male collateral relative of Raj Gobardhan Singh now alive. He is a somewhat distant kinsman of Gobardhan Singh, the fact being that his great grandfather and Gobardhan Singh's grandfather were full brothers.

In September 1912 the Allahabad Bank brought a suit against the three Raniis of Raj Gobardhan Singh and the parties to this present suit to recover money due on certain mortgages said to have been executed by Gobardhan Singh. In the course of that suit the present defendant-appellant denied the genuineness and validity of Gobardhan Singh's Will, and it is this denial which has furnished the cause of action for the present declaratory suit.

The claim of the plaintiff here was resisted in the Court below on a variety of grounds. It will not be necessary for us for the purpose of disposing of this appeal to notice all the grounds of defence which were taken in the Court below. It was alleged for example that the plaintiff was not the son of Raj Gobardhan Singh's daughter. That position has now been abandoned. The defendant denied the execution of the Will. In his written statement he had put forward various allegations for the purpose of pleading that the Will could have no operation in law. There were averments of fraud, which were ultimately struck out of the written statement on the ground that the defendant declined to verify or vouch for the truth of them. The result of the exclusion of these pleas of fraud was that the only averment which was left in the written statement and which attacked the validity of the Will was one to the effect that the testator Raj Gobardhan Singh was an ignorant and illiterate man who was incapable of understanding the language or the purport of the Will now produced in Court. The case for the defendant, therefore, was that this document upon which the plaintiff relied did not and could not represent the intentions of Raj Gobardhan Singh and could not in these Circumstances take effect as a valid disposition of Gobardhan Singh's property.

The genuineness and validity of the Will were the principal matters for discussion and decision in the Court below. The Subordinate Judge has found that the Will is a genuine and valid document. He has found that it was duly executed and attested on the date on which it purports to have been executed and attested. He has also found that Raj Gobardhan Singh was of sound disposing mind and that he knew and approved of the contents of the Will which, according to the Subordinate Judge, was prepared agreeably to the instructions given by Raj Gobardhan Singh himself. Acting upon this finding the learned Subordinate Judge gave the plaintiff the declaration which he sought, and now the defendant has come here in appeal and has attacked the judgment of the Court below on various grounds which are set out in the thirty paragraphs contained in the memorandum of appeal.

We may state here that the learned Advocate for the appellant has not attempted to argue all the matters which are raised in the petition of appeal. He has confined his arguments to a few points only, and the first and principal one of these is the genuineness and validity of the Will in suit. It is claimed here that on the evidence placed before the trial Court the finding that the Will was duly executed by Raj Gobardhan Singh is erroneous. We are asked to hold that it was proved that Gobardhan Singh, although not in any way of unsound mind, was a man of no education and of feeble understanding who could not possibly have understood the language in which the Will is written, and that he could not have understood or approved of the dispositions of his property which are set out in the Will; in short, that he never had any real intention of bequeathing his estate in the manner and on the terms set out in the Will.

The original Will was produced in Court and is marked as Exhibit 92 on the record. It is a registered document, which according to the endorsements was presented for registration and registered in the office of the Sub-Registrar of Lakhimpur on the 15th of November 1903. At the bottom of the deed, which purports to be in the handwriting of one Murli Maanohar now deceased, are to be found the signature of Raj Gobardhan Singh as executant and the signatures of two attesting witnesses Roshan Lal and Zamin Ali, who have been examined in the case. The text of the Will purports to have been written on the 29th of August 1903, but the story for the plaintiff is that although the Will was drawn up and ready for execution on the date last mentioned, it was not actually executed or attested until the time it was presented for registration on the 13th of November 1903.

It may be observed here that some importance attaches to the dates which we have referred. The Will being the Will of a Taluqdar and purporting to dispose of property which is talugdari property, regard must be had to the special provisions of section 13 of Act I of 1869, which provide that in certain cases of bequest (of which the present case is one) the Will in order to take effect must be registered within one month from the date of its execution. It has been argued here that as a matter of fact the Will, if it was ever properly executed at all, was executed on the 29th of August 1903 as soon as it was ready and that consequently registration having been delayed beyond the period of one month just referred to, the Will has no effect in law.

Before proceeding to an examination of the evidence which is relevant for the purpose of deciding the question of execution and the further question of the legal validity of the document in suit, we may refer to the law which applies to suits in which a Will is propounded by a plaintiff. We have been referred to a great many authorities, principally decisions of the English Courts, on this question. Most of the cases which were cited before us have been referred to in a judgment of the Calcutta High Court reported as Womesh Chunder Biswas v. Rushmohini Dasi (1). We accept the law as laid down in this ruling of the Calcutta Court.

A plaintiff who sets up a title under a Will must satisfy the Court that the Will was "duly executed", that is to say, he must furnish proof of execution which carries with it a conviction that the testator knew and approved of the contents of the instrument. This involves the proposition that he was a free and capable testator. The ordinary rule is that the execution of a Will by a competent testator raises a presumption (sufficient, if nothing appears to the contrary) that he knew and approved of the contents of the Will; and ordinarily the competency of the testator is presumed, if nothing appears to rebut the ordinary presumption. But where the mental capacity of the testator is challenged by evidence, it is the duty of the Court to find whether upon the evidence it is established that the testator was of sound disposing mind and did know and approve of the contents of the Will. What constitutes a "sound disposing mind" has been defined in one of the English cases referred to in the Calcutta report [Sefton v. Hopwood (2)]. According to this authority it must be shown that the testator was able to understand his position, able to appreciate his property and able to form a judgment with respect to the parties whom he chooses to benefit. If the testator has this capacity, it is sufficient for the purpose of showing that he had what is known in law as "a sound disposing mind."

(1) 21 C. 279; 10 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 818.

We have already indicated the line of defence which was set up regarding the capacity of Raj Gobardhan Singh. It was not stated that he was in any way of unsound mind. The allegation was that he was an uneducated man, of a low degree of intelligence and that he was incapable of understanding the language or purport of the Will which he is said to have executed. We have, therefore, to consider the evidence which was put forward by the defendant in support of this plea, consisting of statements made by some sixteen witnesses all of whom profess to have had some acquaintance, more or less intimate, with the character and manner of life of Raj Gobardhan Singh. The whole of the evidence on this part of the case has been analysed at great length by the learned Subordinate Judge in his judgment. The evidence has again been read over to us at the time of the hearing of the appeal and we do not deem it necessary to subject it to further recapitulation and analysis. We may say at once that our estimate of the evidence agrees generally with that which was formed by the Judge of the trial Court and we are satisfied that it falls very far short of proving that Gobardhan Singh was a man of less than ordinary mental capacity.

To begin with, it is evident that some of the witnesses who depose in support of the defendant's case had very meagre opportunities of forming an opinion regarding the mental power of the testator. It is further manifest that a good deal of the evidence of those of the witnesses who profess to have had a more extensive acquaintance with Gobardhan Singh's ways of life was biased and in parts certainly untrue. Some of the evidence has been discarded altogether by the learned Subordinate Judge, for example, the testimony of a Hakim named Niamatullah Khan who was examined as defendant's witness No. 16. The admissions of this witness in the course of cross-examination lead us to the conclusion that he was hired for the purposes of the suit and was prepared to stick at nothing, not merely to support the case put forward by the defendant but to carry it much further than the defendant was himself prepared to go. This witness ventures to assert on the strength of an alleged medical acquaintance with Gobardhan Singh which began and terminated many years ago that Gobardhan Singh was a man whose mental faculties were impaired. The witness describes him as suffering from what he calls "Humuq" or imbecility. We agree with the learned Subordinate Judge that no reliance whatever can be placed upon this man's testimony. Then we have the statements made by other witnesses describing various eccentricities of behaviour on the part of Raj Gobardhan Singh. If it be assumed that all these statements are true (though we think the assumption would in some instances at least be a very rash one), all that they tend to show in our opinion is not that Gobardhan Singh, to quote the words of the deponents themselves, was a "fool" but a rough, uneducated man of unpleasant manners. Gobardhan Singh,

according to these witnesses, spoke nothing but the coarse village dialect and was unable to comprehend the more elegant language affected by his visitors. According to their evidence he seems to have been a man who was lacking in any sense of dignity and a man who comported himself in defiance of the conventions of polite society—conventions which he seems to have been ignorant of or to have despised. Some of the acts attributed to Gobardhan Singh, on the strength of which the witnesses have expressed their opinion that he was a man of mean intelligence, would suggest to us rather that Gobardhan Singh was the possessor of a fund of rough humour which the witnesses themselves had not the intelligence to appreciate. What they describe as acts of imbecility might equally well be understood to be the efforts of a man who had a strong propensity for practical joking. It is asking too much of us to invite us to assume that a man who had not the manners to send for a groom to hold his visitors' horse or to offer his friends a chair is a person of low mental calibre, nor are we prepared to believe that a rough and boorish man who walked with a line of beaters and made facetious remarks to a Deputy Collector about the lack of game is necessarily a person who is in any way mentally deficient. Some of the witnesses who were most vigorous in their declarations regarding Gobardhan Singh's immoderate use of intoxicants cut a poor figure in cross-examination. In many instances their affected knowledge dwindled down in cross-examination to information which had been picked up in the course of idle gossip. One witness, who committed himself to the opinion that Gobardhan Singh was a fool because he was fond of singing, had to admit that he had never listened to any of Gobardhan Singh's performances. The same witness referred to Gobardhan Singh's indulgence in a certain form of sport which for the want of a more suitable expression we may describe as "lark fighting". This was described by the witness as being a striking example of Gobardhan Singh's infirmity of mind. In cross-examination, however, the witness was constrained to admit that he had only seen Gobardhan

Singh following this harmless pastime on one occasion. It would, we think, be useless to describe in detail the various acts to which the defence witnesses refer. It may be that Gobardhan Singh was a bit of a buffoon, but we decline to draw the conclusion that he was a man of less than ordinary mental power. After reading all the evidence produced on this head for the defence we think that Gobardhan Singh may be fairly described in the language which was used by one of the defendant's own witnesses, a respectable Taluqdar named Saiyed Raza Husain who was on intimate terms with Gobardhan Singh. He speaks of him as being an uneducated man, of ordinary intellect who could converse in the ordinary Urdu language and understand it.

Another defence witness is Sheo Dayal D. W. No. 11, who knew Gobardhan Singh for many years and was in fact in his employ for a time. While he did his best to support the case for the defendant, he was obliged to admit in cross-examination that although Gobardhan Singh was of "weak intellect", he nevertheless had sense enough not to sign documents until their meaning had been explained to him. The witness says distinctly that when any matter was under discussion Raj Gobardhan Singh used always to ask for explanation of things he did not understand. We think we may safely act upon this statement which was obviously made with considerable reluctance and, if we do, the matter of Gobardhan Singh's capacity to make a Will is disposed of at once. It may be mentioned that this same witness further deposed that Gobardhan Singh knew that he had an estate, that there must be an heir to his estate, and that he had quite sufficient understanding to be able to express an opinion as to who his heir and successor should be. The witness also speaks of Gobardhan Singh as being able to read and write the Hindi language. We need only refer to the deposition of another witness Merdai Lal D. W. No. 12, who started life as a menial servant in Gobardhan Singh's employment. He says he was with Gobardhan Singh for about 24 years and while he was ready to depose to various acts of imbecility committed by Gobardhan

RAJ BACHAN SINGH V. SHATRANJJI.

Singh, he stated in cross-examination that Gobardhan Singh had sufficient intelligence to be able to talk about his heir and to indicate where his estate should go after his death. The question of Gobardhan Singh's testamentary capacity may, we think, be allowed to rest upon these statements. We think it, however, proper to mention that although Gobardhan Singh's two widows were examined as witnesses in the case, no question seems to have been put to them for the purpose of eliciting any information regarding their husband's mental powers. It would almost seem from the manner in which this part of the case was presented that Gobardhan Singh must have reserved his eccentricities of behaviour for people outside his family circle. Not a single question was asked of these ladies for the purpose of showing that Gobardhan Singh was in the habit of using intoxicants freely and yet we have the statement of a defence witness, one Thakur Gobardhan Singh (D. W. No. 17), who went the length of saying that he had never seen Raj Gobardhan Singh sober outside his house.

The last comment which we shall make on this part of the case is that the defendant, who admittedly lived next door to Gobardhan Singh, who was constantly in Gobardhan Singh's society and who from all accounts was managing Gobardhan Singh's estate for him for some time before his death, did not think it fit to enter the witness-box to support the case put forward by him in his written statement. Obviously if these stories which the defence witnesses told about Gobardhan Singh's manner of life and habits are true, the defendant was in a position to depose to his own impressions gathered from an intimate personal experience. He has, however, chosen to leave the task of proving this part of his case to a miscellaneous collection of outsiders, and his keeping away from the witness-box is hardly to be explained or excused on the ground that he is deeply interested in the result of the suit. There can, we think, be no doubt that Raj Gobardhan Singh in spite of his rough ways was a good natured man. This is the testimony of his old servant Mandat Lal. It is also proved by evidence on both sides that Gobardhan Singh always showed a kindly disposition towards the present defendant appellant. He treated him very kindly and entrusted the management of his estate to him. Bearing in mind the conduct of Bachan Singh since the time of Raj Gobardhan Singh's death and in particular his conduct with regard to the present suit, it might well have been suggested that if any folly is to be imputed to Gobardhan Singh the most conspicuous and convincing proof of it is to be found in the fact that he treated Bachan Singh so well. Raj Gobardhan Singh, if he could come to life again, would probably acknowledge readily that his kindly treatment of Bachan Singh, viewed in the light of subsequent events, has laid him open to the imputation of a serious lack of discretion.

We have no doubt, therefore, that Raj Gobardhan Singh had a sound disposing mind; and we proceed now to examine the evidence relating to the preparation and execution of the Will. The three principal witnesses on this part of the case are Kamta Prasad, Zamin Ali and Roshan Lal. The two last-named witnesses are attesting witnesses of the Will. Kamta Prasad does not profess to have been present at the time the Will was actually signed by the testator. He deposes, however, to events which took place up till the time the draft of the Will was prepared.

Three other witnesses, whose evidence is material on this part of the case, are the two Ranis Suraj Kunwar and Dammar Kumari Devi and a man named Parbhu Dayal. Both the Ranis depose that Gobardhan had expressed to them his intention of making a Will in favour of his daughter's son. The evidence of the junior Rani is more particular in this respect, and we have it from her statement that her husband during his lifetime showed her the Will on one occasion. She also deposes that she found the Will in a box after her husband's death.

Kamta Prasad is a man who was in the service of Gobardhan Singh for a considerable period and according to his story, Gobardhan Singh first expressed his intention of making a Will at a time when a suit known as the Mallanpur suit was going on. In order to explain what the witness means in this connection, it is necessary to refer shortly to this litigation. The history of it is to be found in Volume VIII, Oudh Cases, at page 94 [Musammatt Parbati Kuar v. Rani Chandrapal Kuar (3)]. The suit was brought by one Parbati Kunwar claiming the property which had been left by her father Milap Singh. Her suit was resisted by a number of defendants and it is proved that Gobardhan Singh himself was a defendant in the suit, being at that time in possession of some property which the lady was claiming. The main defence which was set up to her claim was that under a family custom daughters were excluded from inheritance, and her suit was dismissed on the finding that the custom was proved to exist. The learned Counsel for the respondent in addressing us on this part of the case has pointed out that Gobardhan Singh did not actually file any written statement of defence in the suit just mentioned. It appears, however, that he was represented by an agent and that the agent intimated to the Court that his principal took the same line of defence as the other defendants in the case.

To continue the story of Kamta Prasad, he says that Gobardhan Singh first conceived the idea of bequeathing the estate to his daughter some 5 or 6 months before the marriage of the girl took place. According to the witness the reason which prompted Gobardhan Singh to make a Will in favour of his daughter was that the present defendant Bachan Singh, who was the nearest male heir, had no sons of his own but had only a daughter. According to Kamta Prasad, Gobardhan Singh expressed an apprehension that if the estate devolved upon Bachan Singh he would make it over to his daughter, and consequently Gobardhan Singh thought he might as well make a disposition of his estate in favour of his own daughter. The witness proceeds to state that a draft Will was prepared on these lines by one Murli Manohar, who was in the service of the estate and who is now dead. Afterwards Gobardhan Singh made certain alterations in the draft, the principal one being the introduction of a clause by which the estate was bequeathed to his daughter's son, if she should have any, after the termination of the life-estate in favour of the widows. The daughter's right to succeed was postponed to her son according to the new arrangement. Kamta Prasad's story is that this alteration in the Will was suggested to Gobardhan Singh by a Pleader named Babu Sheo Bakhsh Rai, who was consulted at Lakhimpur at the time the draft of the Will was being prepared. The witness goes on to say that after these changes had been made a fresh copy of the Will was prepared, namely, the document which is now before the Court. The witness speaks of the contents of this document being read over to Gobardhan Singh, who afterwards put the document away in his box. Kamta Prasad was not present at the time the Will was executed and he was, therefore, unable to depose to the events which happened later, that is to say, in the month of November 1903.

The evidence of this witness has been exposed to a good deal of criticism. It has been suggested that his story regarding the motive of Gobardhan Singh in making this Will is a false story and we have also been asked to find that his statement regarding the circumstances in which the bequest came to be made in favour of the daughter's son is also untrue. It is pointed out in particular that Kamta Prasad's story regarding the advice or suggestion given by Babu Sheo Bakhsh Rai was introduced at a late stage of his story.

We are not much impressed by this criticism and we agree with the Subordinate Judge in thinking that in substance this story of Kamta Prasad is perfectly true. No doubt, as has been pointed out, there are some variations between the statement of Kamta Prasad and that of Roshan Lal, which we shall presently consider; but it is fair to say as regards these that they are discrepancies of minor importance and that they are probably due to the fact that the witness was being examined and cross-examined regarding events which had taken place some twelve years before the date upon which he was giving his evidence. In circumstances like these it would be unreasonable to expect a witness to remember every petty detail or to preserve an accurate recollection of events in their chronological sequence. Kamta Prasad was subjected to a very severe cross examination, and it is due to him to say that nothing was elicited in the course of it which can reasonably be pointed to as indicating that he was giving false evidence.

We next proceed to discuss the evidence of Roshan Lal, one of the attesting witnesses in the case. Like Kamta Prasad he makes certain statements relating to a point of time anterior to the execution of the Will. In some respects his story regarding the story of the preparation of the Will does not agree with that of Kamta Prasad. As to this fact we are content to accept what the Subordinate Judge has found in this connection, namely, that the discrepancies between Roshan Lal's story on this part of the case and the story of Kamta Prasad are really of no importance whatever. To come now to the important statements of Roshan Lal, he began his evidence by saying that Gobardhan Singh executed a Will in favour of his daughter's son. The witness says he attested it and that the other attesting witness was Zamin Ali. He deposed that the attestation took place in the office of the Sub-Registrar of Lakhimpur. His first statement regarding the execution of the Will by Gobardhan Singh was that Gobardhan Singh's signature was already on the Will. He stated that Gobardhan Singh admitted before him that he had executed the Will and asked him to attest it. Accordingly he made the attestation in the Sub-Registrar's office and the Will was thereafter registered in his presence. In answer to a question put by the Court the witness stated that he did not remember whether Gobardhan Singh had or had not signed in his presence. He admitted, however, that he had given evidence regarding the execution of this Will in the Court of the Tahsildar in the year 1905. Before this statement was put to him, he was asked if he could remember what he said on that occasion. His story was that he could not, but that he was prepared to say that any statement he made before the Tahsildar was true. Roshan Lal confirmed the statement of Kamta Prasad regarding the preparation of the Will by Murli Manohar and he too states that Murli Manohar read the Will over to the Raja. The witness was cross-examined at very great length and clearly a very strenuous effort was made to break down his credit. He admitted that in the suit which was brought by the Allahabad Bank a year or two before the institution of the present suit he had told the Court that he had attested a Will of Gobardhan Singh but was unable to say where Gobardhan Singh had got it written. He admitted that he told the Court on that occasion that Gobardhan Singh did not sign the Will in his presence but that it bore his signature. When this statement was put to the witness in cross examination, he stated plainly that it was not a true statement. He explained that when he was being examined in the Bank case his memory must have failed him at the time. He said that he had come to Court on that occasion in a hurry and the Will was not shown to him. He went on to say that at the time he was making his deposition in the present case, he was able to say definitely that the Raja actually did sign the Will in his presence in the office of the Sub Registrar. This statement was made in the course of cross-examination. The witness admitted that in his examination in-chief he failed to make a definite statement on this point, but his explanation was that he had stirred up his memory since the time his examination began and that at the time his answer was given he was thoroughly assured that the Raja executed the Will in his presence. His last statement regarding the execution of the Will reads as follows:—"The Sub Registrar read the Will to the Raja and then told him to sign it and get it attested. It was then he signed and after it we attested."

It is not to be doubted that Roshan Lal's evidence is open to the adverse criticism which has been freely bestowed upon it. The Subordinate Judge seems to have thought that Roshan Lal was a witness who in the matter of giving false evidence was prepared to sail as near the wind as he dared. We are inclined to agree with the Subordinate Judge on this point, and we think there is reason to suspect that some attempt had been made to tamper with the witness. We have it that although a summons was duly served on him, Roshan Lal kept away from the Court and it was only when the plaintiff, who was bound to call him as being one of the attesting witnesses, applied to the Court for a warrant for his arrest that he appeared in Court. We think it is a fortunate circumstance that the plaintiff was able to show that Roshan Lal was examined on two occasions in the year 1905 shortly after the death of Gobardhan Singh for the purpose of proving the execution of the Will. The record of those statements still exists, and it was no doubt the knowledge of this fact that helped to keep Roshan Lal in the present case from committing downright perjury. Exhibit 13 is a copy of the statement which Roshan Lal made to the Tahsildar of Lakhimpur on the 19th of July 1905 in the course of the mutation proceedings. Obviously the original Will was before the Court at that time and after seeing it Roshan Lal deposed that he identified the signatures of Gobardhan Singh on the Will—signatures which he said were made in his presence in the office of the Sub-Registrar. He told the Tahsildar that he was one of the attesting witnesses, that Zamin Ali was the other attesting witness, that the Will had been written by Murli Manohar who was then dead, that the Raja took the Will to the Sub-Registrar and handed it over for registration and that it was then that he made the signatures on the Will in the Sub-Registrar's office.

The word "signatures" used in the plural is to be explained by the fact that there are three signatures of Gobardhan Singh on the document, one at the bottom of the document intended to be his signature as executant, the other two signatures are on the back of the document and are made underneath the two endorsements made by the registering officer on the 13th November 1903.

Exhibit 90 is a certified copy of another statement made by Roshan Lal to the Tahsildar of Nighasan on the 28th of July 1905. The original Will was not produced before this Tahsildar, but Roshan Lal deposed that he had already given evidence before the Lakhimpur Tahsildar regarding the original Will. His statement to the Tahsildar of Nighasan agrees with what he stated before the Tahsildar of Lakhimpur. We agree with the Subordinate Judge that Roshan Lal's attempt to explain away the statement he made in the Bank case regarding the execution of this Will is a clumsy one, but we are not prepared to reject his statement on this ground as being false and unreliable. With regard to some of the contradictions which appear in his evidence, it is fair to make allowance for the very long period which elapsed between the time of the events deposed to and the time on which the witness was giving his evidence. We must attach very great importance to Roshan Lal's present statement, namely, that the story he told in the Courts of the two Tahsildars was the true story regarding the execution of the Will. At the time the Will was produced in the Revenue Courts there was no particular reason why Roshan Lal should have made anything but a straightforward statement; and besides at that time the circumstances attending the execution of the Will were all fresh in his memory. A good deal has happened since the time Roshan Lal gave evidence before the Tahsildars; and it is only too probable that some attempt has been made to corrupt him and induce him to give false evidence. This conjecture is, we think, fortified by the fact that he appeared as an unwilling witness in the present suit.

The next witness Zamin Ali entered Gobardhan Singh's service in the month of November 1903, only a few days before the date of the registration of the Will. There is documentary evidence on the record to prove that the power-of-attorney which Gobardhan Singh gave this witness was registered at Lakhimpur on the 10th of November 1903, that is to say, three days before the Will was registered. Zamin Ali began his evidence by saying that he did not remember whether or not Gobardhan Singh signed the Will in his presence. He was able, however, to say that Gobardhan Singh made his signatures on the back of the Will in his presence. The document was then shown to the witness. He admitted that it bore his signature and that his signature was dated the 13th of November 1903. It is important to note, moreover, that the witness signed as "Mukhtar-am" (general attorney) of the Bijua Estate. The witness admitted that Roshan Lal attested the document on the same date and that the attestation took place in the office of the Sub-Registrar. The witness was pressed for an answer as to whether the Raja signed the Will in his presence in the Sub-Registrar's office; his answer was that he did not remember. He deposed that the Raja had asked him to attest saying that he had executed the Will. The witness was then confronted with the statement which he had made before the Tahsildar in the mutation proceedings in the year 1905 (Exhibit 14). This document having been put to him the witness made the following answer:— "I did tell the Tahsildar that the Raja signed in the Sub-Registrar's office in my presence and that I attested. The statement is true and correct." The witness went on to explain that without his memory having been refreshed by hearing his previous statement read out to him, he could not have recollected all that had taken place at such a distant time. He was, however, prepared to say after hearing his previous statement that as a matter of fact the Raja did sign the Will at the registration office in his presence. The witness, it may be remarked, does not profess to know anything about the contents of the Will. He says he never read it and he was unable to say whether the Will had been read out in the Sub Registrar's office. Roshan Lal's story on this point was that the Will had been read out. The cross-examination of this witness brought out nothing to his discredit. He merely reiterated the statements he had made in his examination-in-chief. In answer to a question put by the Court he deposed that after the Will had been executed, he heard the Raja discussing the matter with one Nil Kanth Draj Sah who was employed for some time as a manager. His story was that Nil Kanth told the Raja that he had done wrong to make such a Will. The Raja's answer was that he was sorry for having done so and would cancel it. We may dismiss this statement as being pure invention. We do not believe a word of it.

Lastly there is the evidence of the witness Parbhu Dayal. He was not called upon to attest the document, but he swears that he was present at the registration office at the time the Will was presented and that he saw the Raja sign the Will and saw the two witnesses Roshan Lal and Zamin Ali attest it. It is the fact that neither Roshan Lal nor Zamin Ali made any mention of the presence of this man at the registration office at the time the Will was put in. The Subordinate Judge says that it is not necessarily to be assumed from this fact that Parbhu Dayal was not there. There is no reason to disbelieve the story of Parbhu Dayal that he was in the employment of Raj Gobardhan Singh. He says that he was called to Lakhimpur at the time this document was registered and that he went there bringing with him some money which the Raja wanted. We are not prepared to differ from the view which the Subordinate Judge took regarding the evidence of Parbhu Dayal.

What then is the sum and substance of the statements of all these witnesses, statements which we are prepared to accept as being in the main true accounts of what took place? They show to us very clearly that the Raja had made up his mind to make a Will, first, in favour of his daughter and, afterwards, when the suggestion was made to him, in favour of his daughter's son. A great deal of argument has been addressed to us regarding the probabilities of such a thing having taken place.

It is pointed out that the Raja in the Mallanpur case had taken up the line that daughters were excluded from inheritance and so, it is said, being conscious of this fact, it is not likely that he would have made up his mind to make a Will either in favour of his daughter or of her son, if she had one. It is one thing to say that a custom of exclusion of daughters existed in this family, but it is another thing to say that Gobardhan Singh necessarily approved of the custom. Being a Taluqdar he had full powers to dispose of his property as he thought fit and if, as we believe, he entertained great affection for Musammat Bittu who was his only child, then we can see no reason whatever why Gobardhan Singh should not have decided to defy the custom and to pass the property on to his daughter or her children; and we think there is every reason to believe the story told by Kamta Prasad regarding the motive which prompted Gobardhan Singh to prepare this Will. If Bachan Singh had no son of his own and if there was any likelihood of his handing over the property to his daughter, then we think Gobardhan Singh might very well make up his mind to see that his own daughter or her children should get the benefit of his property rather than Bachan Singh's daughter.

Another argument put forward is that Gobardhan Singh could never have intended to make a Will of this kind in view of the fact that he was greatly displeased with the family into which his daughter was married. In fact evidence has been led for the defence to show that Gobardhan Singh was so much dissatisfied with his daughter's marriage that he expressed an intention of never having anything to do with her. We may say at once that we believe that all the evidence given to this effect is false. The man who might have been expected to give the best evidence on this part of the case was Bachan Singh himself. He, however, as we have already mentioned, preferred to remain away from the witness-box. It is proved that Bachan Singh was present at the marriage and took a prominent part in the marriage ceremonies and festivities. He now asks the Court to believe that certain events took place at the time of the wedding which incensed Gobardhan Singh so much that he shut himself up and refused to have anything to do with the proceedings. This story has been allowed to be told by two outside witnesses, one of whom is a retired Sub-Inspector of Police named Ghulam Yazdani; another is D. W. No. 1, a fellow named Liakat Ali Khan who follows the profession of a mukhtar or karinda. According to Liakat Ali Khan's statement at the time when the marriage took place he (the witness) was in the service of the Taluqdar of Kothwara. He mentions that the Taluqdar was unable to attend the wedding but went some little time afterwards in order to pay his congratulations to Gobardhan Singh. According to Liakat Ali Khan on that occasion the Raja told the Taluqdar of Kothwara that it was a good thing he had not been present at the wedding because he (Gobardhan Singh) had been disgraced. He said that his daughter had lost her religion (be dharam hogai). As regards this statement we need only refer to the evidence of Saiyed Raza Husain, the Taluqdar who was employing Liakat Ali Khan at this time. His story is that no such conversation ever passed between Gobardhan Singh and himself. We have no hesitation, therefore, in disposing of Liakat Ali Khan's story as being untrue. As for the evidence of the Sub-Inspector we are unable to attach much importance to it. It appears that he was sent to Gobardhan Singh's house for the purpose of keeping order at the time of wedding festivities. He was not invited there as a guest, and his cross-examination tends to show that his knowledge of the events he deposes to was acquired by hearsay. Other evidence was given for the purpose of showing that Gobardhan Singh practically cut off all connection with his daughter. The lie to all this has been given in the evidence of the two Ranis, whose statements we are prepared to accept. We might observe here that neither of these ladies is the mother of Musammal Bitto who was Gobardhan's daughter by another wife. It can hardly be suggested, therefore, that they have any particular interest in supporting the plaintiff's case. They deny altogether that Gobardhan Singh was displeased with the marriage and they swore that presents were sent on various occasions to the lady after she had gone to her husband's home. There is also evidence from the Shahpura estate which proves, in our opinion, conclusively that these presents were actually sent and we, therefore, dismiss as fiction the story that Gobardhan Singh had made up his mind to have nothing more to do with his daughter or any child that might be born from her. Even the defendant's witnesses were not prepared to go the length of saying that Gobardhan Singh had ceased to have any regard for his child. We have the statement of the witness Mendai Lal that Gobardhan Singh had a great affection for Bitto and that he was not in any way displeased with her marriage.

Another objection put forward to the story regarding the execution of the Will is the circumstance that the act of execution was postponed for a considerable period. It is argued that there was no reason why, if the Will in its present form was ready for execution at the end of August 1903, it should not have been there and then signed and attested.

It is hardly to be expected that any definite evidence should be forthcoming for the purpose of explaining the delay in execution. Kamta Prasad indeed suggests that the Raja was suddenly called away, after the fair copy of Will had been prepared, by reason of his wife's illness. That statement may or may not be true, but it is as likely as not that Gobardhan Singh determined not to be in too great a hurry about making a final decision regarding the disposal of his estate. The evidence all shows that he took a long time in discussing the matter before he arrived at the stage of having a preliminary draft prepared; and it is by no means unlikely that he was further determined to deliberate over the matter before he finally decided to put his name to the Will. While it may be an unusual thing for a document of this kind to be presented for registration without having been previously executed, we are not prepared to say that this circumstance is so suspicious as to justify us in rejecting the story of the witnesses regarding the execution and attestation.

To sum up this part of the case, we think the learned Subordinate Judge has expressed a correct appreciation of the evidence which was before him. He refers in his judgment to certain pieces of circumstantial evidence which fortified him in accepting the statements of the plaintiff's witnesses. He points in the first place to the fact that the Will was produced very shortly after the death of Gobardhan Singh. He further points out that at the time the Will was produced and the mutation proceedings were going on, Bachan Singh was still the manager of Gobardhan Singh's estate. It is not to be doubted that Bachan Singh knew all about this Will from the very moment it was produced, if not before, and it is impossible to suppose that the terms of this Will could have been kept from his knowledge, and yet we have it that a Will about which so much is said in the present suit was allowed to go unchallenged by Bachan Singh up till the time the suit was brought by the Allahabad Bank in the year 1912. Then again, as the learned Judge observes, the publicity attending the execution and attestation of the Will is a strong point in favour of the view that it is an absolutely genuine document, and due weight must also be given to the fact that it was registered. We have no hesitation, therefore, in affirming the finding of the Court below. We believe that this Will was as a matter of fact executed by Gobardhan Singh on the 13th of November 1903, that it was attested on the same date by the two witnesses Roshan Lal and Zamin Ali, that it was prepared in accordance with instructions given by Gobardhan Singh, that it was read over and explained to him after the fair copy had been drawn out and that it expresses correctly the intentions which Gobardhan Singh had formed regarding the disposal of his estate. It is not necessary for us to find that Gobardhan Singh could have understood every single word contained in the Will. Most probably he could not understand such of the expressions as are technical and high-flown, but we entertain no doubt whatever that Gobardhan Singh did intend that his property should pass after the death of his widows to his daughter's son; and we have no reason, therefore, for supposing that he did not understand and approve of the contents of the Will. In our opinion, the plaintiff has established everything which under the law he was bound to establish for the purpose of obtaining a declaration that the Will was a genuine and valid document.

This is the main part of the appellant's case and we have only now to deal with one or two other points relating to the construction of the Will and to the form of the decree which the Subordinate Judge has granted. As regards the construction of the Will, the view taken by the learned Subordinate Judge is that it creates a vested remainder in favour of the plaintiff which is to take effect in possession immediately on the termination of the life-estates created in favour of the two widows. As regards the ten villages which under the Will are to go to Bachan Singh for life after the death of the two widows, the Subordinate Judge declared that the plaintiff has a contingent remainder.

It has been argued very strenuously that we ought not to find on the language of the Will that the plaintiff has any vested interest in the property bequeathed to him. We are asked to find that Gobardhan Singh could only have intended that the plaintiff was to have this property in the event of his surviving the two widows. To this one answer is that if Gobardhan Singh had any such intention, it would have been very easy for him to give expression to it by providing in the Will that the plaintiff was only to take the estate in case he survived the Ranis. The fact, however, is that there is nothing in the language of the document to indicate that Gobardhan Singh had any such intention. There is a gift of a life-estate to the Ranis with an absolute gift over to the daughter's son, and it is not denied that this language, if given its due legal effect, amounts to the bequest of a vested remainder in favour of the present plaintiff. But it is said we ought not to construe the language of the Will by the rules which would be observed in dealing with the Will of a testator in England. It is argued that Gobardhan Singh knew nothing about vested or contingent remainders and that it is more natural to suppose that he intended the property to go in the usual way it would go according to the provisions of the Hindu Law. If Gobardhan Singh was content to let his property devolve according to the Hindu Law, there appears to have been no particular reason why he should have gone to the trouble of making a Will, at any rate of making a Will containing the directions which we find in the document now before us. We have already expressed our belief that it was the intention of Gobardhan Singh to prevent this property from going away to the daughter of Bachan Singh, and this being so, there can, we think, be no good reason why we should not assume that in order to anticipate such a contingency Gobardhan Singh had made up his mind that the property should go into the family into which his daughter had married. We have no doubt, therefore, that the Subordinate Judge was perfectly right in holding that under the terms of this Will the plaintiff has a vested interest in the estate left by Gobardhan Singh. We may conclude our observations on this part of the case by drawing attention to the fact that although the question of the nature of the interest taken by the plaintiff under the Will was the subject of an issue in the Court below, no argument was addressed to the Court by the defendant's learned Counsel. It is only when the case comes up here in appeal that it has been argued seriously that the interest of the plaintiff in the property is not a vested interest.

Before concluding our judgment we have to refer to one point which it was sought to make on behalf of the appellant, a point which is raised in paragraph 26 of the memorandum of appeal. It is complained that the Subordinate Judge wrongly refused to allow the issue of a commission for the examination of Sir Harcourt Butler, who was at the time the trial was going on the Lieutenant-Governor of Burma. The object of applying for the issue of this commission was to obtain Sir Harcourt's evidence regarding his opinion of the state of mind of Raj Gobardhan Singh with whom, it is said, he was acquainted many years ago at the time when he was the Settlement Officer of the Kheri district. The application for the issue of a commission was made to the Court on the 5th January 1916, i.e., more than a year after the institution of the suit. On the 6th of January the Subordinate Judge refused to issue the order. It appears from the proceedings of the Court below that an affidavit was filed in support of the application for the issue of a commission. The learned Subordinate Judge pointed out that certain material particulars were not disclosed in the affidavit. He further pointed out that no suggestion to call Sir Harcourt Butler was ever made until the 5th of January 1916, after the plaintiff had closed his evidence. At the time the application was presented the evidence of the defence witnesses was being taken. In these circumstances we think the Subordinate Judge was thoroughly justified in refusing to issue a commission.

Lastly there remains the form of the declaration contained in the decree. We have already said that we agree with the finding of the Subordinate Judge that the plaintiff has a vested interest in the property bequeathed to him by Raj Gobardhan Singh, and so far as the decree declares the nature of this interest we can see no reason to interfere. The plaintiff, who has succeeded in establishing the genuineness and validity of the Will, is certainly entitled to have an expression of the opinion of the Court regarding the nature of the interest which has accrued to him.

There remains, however, the question as to whether in the circumstances the Court was justified in making any declaration regarding the nature of the plaintiff's interest in the ten villages which were referred to in the Will. With regard to this portion of the property the position is this. The villages are named by name in the Will, and it is provided that after the demise of all the three widows of the testator these villages are to be held by Raj Bachan Singh for the period of his life. It is further provided that, if Bachan Singh should have a son, the ten villages are to descend to him in full ownership after the termination of Bachan Singh's life estate. Further it is provided that in the event of Bachan Singh's having no male issue, the ten villages are to revert to the estate after Bachan Singh's death and are to become the property of the testator's daughter. From this last clause in the Will it would appear that this provision was made at the time when Gobardhan Singh was still minded to dispose of his estate in favour of his daughter and before it had been suggested to him that the bequest in the first instance should be made in favour of the daughter's son, if she had one.

After hearing the argument of the learned Counsel on both sides we have come to the conclusion that in view of the contingencies which may happen, the interest of the plaintiff in these ten villages is so remote and uncertain that it would be premature and futile to give any declaration regarding it in the present case. In the first place both the widows are still alive and one of them is a comparatively young woman. In the next place Bachan Singh is at present not much over 40 years of age, and it may very well happen that a son may still be born to him, in which case of course the ten villages will pass to his issue. In these circumstances we think the plaintiff cannot reasonably call upon the Court to give any pronouncement regarding the nature and extent of his interest in the ten villages just mentioned and we direct, therefore, that the decree of the Subordinate Judge be modified in this respect by striking out the declaration contained in paragraph 3 of the lower Court's decree, which reads:—

(3) "That he has a contingent remainder in the said excepted items Nos. 2, 6, 7, 11 to 14, 18, 21 and 61."

In other respects the decree is affirmed and we dismiss this appeal with costs to the respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Plaintiff obtained a mortgage of certain properties including a bull, with which alone we are concerned here. The bull was left in the mortgagor's possession and was eventually purchased by 3d defendant from the mortgagor's vendee. The hypothecation of moveables has been recognised in Indian Courts [vide Shyam Sunder v. Chaita (1) and Shrish Chandra Roy v. Mungri Bawa (2)] but that is not the question for consideration now. We have to determine whether a bona fide purchaser for value of hypothecated goods without notice of the hypothecation is bound by it. There is no direct authority on the point, nor is hypothecation of moveables recognised by any Statute. We are, therefore, thrown back upon principles of equity and justice.

Under section 108 of the Indian Contract Act a person in possession of moveables, although not the owner, can pass the property in the goods to an innocent purchaser. Much more, then, would it appear that the real owner could pass the property, which was only subject to an undisclosed hypothecation. Even if we are to apply the principles of English Law on this question, which is perhaps doubtful, we find that it has been held that goods included in a bill of sale and left with the original owner can be purchased in the ordinary course of business by a bona fide purchaser: National Mercantile Bank v. Hampson (3). When goods are left in the possession of the mortgagor, a wide door is opened for fraud, and when the equities between the innocent purchaser and the mortgagee have to be weighed, the preponderance must be given to the purchaser, for the mortgagee has, by his omission to secure possession of the goods, facilitated the commission of the fraud. In this view we think that a bona fide purchaser of hypothecated goods without notice of the encumbrance takes the goods free of it.

The second appeal is dismissed with costs.

Lala Amar Nath Chopra, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of the suit out of which this appeal has arisen are these. In 1899 Kishen Singh and Mahna Singh alienated certain lands in favour of Devi Das, etc. Kishen Singh died in March 1905 and was succeeded by his widow who, however, died in April 1906. In March 1917 Panju Singh, a reversioner, instituted a suit for possession of half of the land so alienated, the defendants being the descendants of Devi Das, etc., the original alienees. Panju Singh's suit was dismissed as barred by the Punjab Limitation Act I of 1900. On appeal the learned District Judge held that inasmuch as the reversioner could not sue for possession during the lifetime of the widow of the alienor, Article 141 of the Indian Limitation Act applied and not the Punjab Limitation Act I of 1900, and that the suit was, therefore, within time. He accordingly remanded the case for decision on the merits.

Against this decision Ganesha Ram, Gopi Ram and Munshi Ram, the defendants, have preferred this appeal and on their behalf I have heard Mr. Shafi, while Lala Amar Nath Chopra has addressed me on behalf of Panju Singh. Mr. Shafi referred me to Sahib Dad v. Rahmat (1), Rasul Bakhsh v. Nabi Bakhsh (2), Khiali Ram v. Gulab Khan (3), Miran Bakhsh v. Ahmad (4), Jiwana v. Abdulah (5), Sohru v. Labha (6) and Bhagat Singh v. Sher Singh (7). I have also consulted the unreported cases referred to in Sohnu v. Labha (6). These cases support the view expressed by the learned District Judge, and Mr. Shafi has sought to differentiate them by pointing out that in all of them the alienor had died before Act I of 1903 came into force. This was the precise line taken before the learned District Judge and after giving careful consideration to Mr. Shafi's argument I am of opinion that the view taken by the learned District Judge is correct. It is in consonance with Miran Bakhsh v. Ahmad (4), which decision has been referred to in most of the other cases cited with approval.

Following that decision I dismiss this appeal with costs.

Where an expectant reversioner relinquished his title to a portion of the inheritance in favour of the widow by a deed of agreement in consideration of receiving a relinquishment from the widow of all her interest in the remaining portion of the inheritance:

Held, that neither the reversioner nor any person claiming through him could set up that the deed of agreement was not binding on him and did not operate on the portion of the inheritance relinquished in favour of the widow. [p. 979, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, 3rd Court, Midnapur, dated the 20th November 1916, affirming that of the Munsif, 4th Court, Tamluk, dated the 26th April 1915.

FACTS material to the report are as follows:—

One Krishna Majhi died leaving him surviving his widow Putti Dasi and a sister's son Haradhan Maity, defendant No. 3 in the present suit. After the death of Krishna Majhi his widow Putti Dasi and the nephew Haradhan entered into an agreement by a deed dated 4th June 1903, whereby the widow got the disputed plots absolutely and the remaining plots left by Krishna Majhi went to the nephew absolutely. Shortly afterwards, the reversioners of one Purnima Dasi, from whom the late Krishna Majhi purchased one of the plots allotted to the widow by the aforesaid arrangement, in the name of his predeceased wife Sundari Dasi, brought a suit for setting aside the sale of the said plot against the widow Putti Dasi and her brother Mohendra, defendant No. 1 in the present suit (who was alleged to be in possession of the said plot). The said suit was contested up to the Appellate Court and it ended in a compromise by which Putti Dasi and her brother got the said plot on payment of a certain sum of money to the plaintiffs. After the death of Putti Dasi the defendant No. 3 sold his interest in the disputed plots to the plaintiff Jogendra Nath Bhunya.

The plaintiff brought this suit for possession after declaration of his title by purchase against Mohendra and Debendra, defendants Nos. 1 and 2 respectively, alleging them to be in wrongful possession of the disputed plots without any title. The defendants Nos. 1 and 2 contested the suit and their main defence was that the plaintiff's predecessor, the pro forma defendant No. 3 Haradhan Maity, having given up his interest in favour of Putti Dasi for a consideration of having himself got the remaining plots, both the defendant No. 3 and the plaintiff whose title was derivative, were estopped from bringing this suit, and that the alleged kobala in favour of the plaintiff was fraudulent, collusive and without consideration.

The lower Appellate Court found against the plaintiff on both the points. Hence this appeal.

JOGENDRA NATH BHUNYA v. MOHENDRA GHOSE.

Babu Mohendra Nath Roy (with him Babu Jyotish Chandra Hazrah), for the Appellant:—The alleged agreement entered into by Haradhan could not confer any title on the widow. Haradhan's interest at the time of the agreement was an interest of a Hindu reversioner expectant upon the death of a female and as such it could not be transferred. Refers to section 6, clause (a) of the Transfer of Property Act, Nund Kishore Lal v. Kanee Ram Tewary (1) and Sham Sundar Lal v. Achhan Kunwar (2). Hence the widow got nothing by the arrangement and any transferees from the widow, such as the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 who are alleged to have purchased a portion of the disputed property from Putti Dasi, have consequently purchased nothing. Further the doctrine of estoppel cannot apply to the present case, since it cannot override the clear provisions of law. If the doctrine of estoppel is allowed to prevail, the Court will have in a manner to give effect to that which the law clearly forbids, namely, that the interest of a Hindu reversioner expectant upon the death of the widow is transferable. As to the second plot which formed the subject-matter of compromise, the doctrine of estoppel does not arise; the title of Putti Dasi was independent of the deed of agreement and consequently the doctrine of estoppel which has its basis in the agreement cannot properly arise.

Babu Mohesh Chandra Banerjee, for the Respondents, not called upon.

JUDGMENT.

FLETCHER, J.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff against the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge of Midnapur, dated the 20th November 1916, affirming the decision of the Munsif of Tamluk. The plaintiff brought the suit for possession of two plots of land on establishment of his title by purchase. Both the Courts below have dismissed the suit. It appears that one Krishna Majhi had two wives Sundari and Putti Dasi. One of the two plots sued for Krishna Majhi purchased in the name of Sundari from one Purnima Dasi. The other plot Krishna Majhi apparently acquired himself. Sundari predeceased Krishna Majhi. On Krishna Majhi's death, he left him surviving Putti Dasi as his heiress and a sister whose son the defendant No. 3 is the vendor to the plaintiff. On the 4th June 1903, the defendant No. 3 relinquished in favour of Putti Dasi both the plots now sued for for a consideration of the defendant No. 3 receiving a relinquishment from Putti Dasi of all her interest in the other plots. Subsequently, Putti Dasi sold one half of plot No. 2 to her brother, the defendant No. 1. Then the sons of Purnima in the year 1911 brought a suit against Putti Dasi and her brother, the defendant No. 1, to recover plot No. 2. That suit was compromised on the defendant No. 1 paying a sum of money to the son of Purnima Dasi for relinquishing all their claims. In 1913, Putti Dasi died and the defendant No. 1 succeeded to the property. In February 1914, the defendant No. 3 sold to the plaintiff. The learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court has held that it is a case of estoppel and that the defendant No. 3 having taken the benefit of the deed of the 4th June 1903, he or any person claiming through him cannot now set up that the document is not binding on him and did not operate on the plots relinquished in favour of Putti Dasi. It seems to me, speaking generally, that he is quite right. The defendant No. 3, having had the benefit and having retained the benefit of this document of the 4th June 1903, cannot now turn round and say that he is not bound by its terms.

A supplemental point was attempted to be made with regard to plot No. 2, and that was that the title of the defendant No. 1 arose under the solenama with the sons of Purnima Dasi and that he did not claim through the deed of the 4th June 1903. Although the compromise might have been by way of confirmation, there is nothing to suggest that the parties intended to give up the rights that they had under and by virtue of the deed of the 4th June 1903. I think the learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court came to a correct conclusion on the facts found Contribution, suit for, maintainability of—Trespassers independent, decree against—Costs recovered from one defendant—Other defendant, whether liable to contribute.

Plaintiff and defendant each obtained a half share in certain property under separate deeds of gift. A third person brought a suit for recovery of a certain share in the property, in which both were impleaded as defendants. Plaintiff contested the suit but the defendant did not, and ultimately the suit was decreed against both with costs. The decree-holder recovered the full amount of the costs from the plaintiff, who thereupon brought a suit for contribution against the defendant, claiming half the costs which he had been compelled to pay;

Held, that the plaintiff and the defendant were independent trespassers who derived their titles under separate deeds of gift and who were separately liable for the trespass committed by each, and that, therefore, the defendant was not liable to contribute anything towards the amount which had been recovered from the plaintiff [p 981, col. 1.]

Second appeal from a decree of the Judge of the Court of Small Causes, exercising the powers of a Subordinate Judge, Cawnpore, dated the 9th May 1916.

The Hon'ble Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru (with him Messrs. Shamnath Mushran and Kailash Nath Katju), for the Appellant.

Mr. Baldeo Ram Dave (with him Messrs. Braj Nath Vyas and Nawal Kishore), for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff-appellant in this suit was a person who under a deed of gift executed by one Jagat Singh obtained a half share in certain property. The respondent Ram Lal Singh is a person who received a half share in the same property by an entirely separate deed of gift from the same Jagat Singh. Beni Madho Singh and Zalim are certain persons claiming to be the lawful owners of a certain share in that property. They brought a suit to recover their shares and they impleaded both Ram Lal Singh and Nand Lal Singh in the suit. Ram Lal Singh did not defend the suit, but Nand Lal Singh did and in the course of his pleadings he stated that Ram Lal Singh was at the bottom of the suit and that he had instigated the plaintiffs to sue. Part of the claim was decreed and part of the claim was dismissed. The plaintiffs appealed in respect to so much of their claim as was disallowed. Nand Lal Singh appealed in respect to so much of the claim as had been decreed against him. The plaintiffs' appeal was allowed, and Nand Lal Singh's appeal was dismissed. Ram Lal Singh was a respondent to both the appeals. He contested neither. In the execution department, Ram Lal Singh pleaded that no portion of the share decreed to the plaintiffs should be taken from him but that it should all be taken from Nand Lal Singh. Nand Lal Singh opposed him. The Court held that each of them had in his hands half of the share decreed. The appellate decree, which is the decree of this Court in the plaintiff's appeal, shows clearly that this Court held that each defendant was separately liable in respect of the property which was in his hands. The order for costs was a joint one. The plaintiffs in the former suit have recovered the whole of their costs from Nand Lal Singh. He has now brought the present suit for contribution, claiming half from the defendant Ram Lal Singh.

This is clearly not a case of joint tort-feasors. Ram Lal Singh derived his title to the property which was in his hands by an entirely separate deed from Jagat Singh and Nand Lal Singh derived his title, such as it was, by a separate deed of gift. The two defendants were not at one in defending the suit. They were as a matter of fact opposed to each other. Paragraph 15 of the written statement of Nand Lal Singh shows this clearly. Ram Lal Singh in no way contested the suit, whereas Nand Lal Singh did and it is quite clear that the extra costs that were incurred in that suit were due to the action of the present plaintiff Nand Lal Singh alone. The case is very much like that of Fakire v. Tasaddug Husain (1). In this case there was no contract between the present parties. Each was in separate possession of property and there was nothing joint. Each was separately liable for the trespass that he had committed. Each trespass was committed separately, and each defendant's liability for mesne profits was entirely separate. The only thing common between them was that they were arrayed as defendants to the suit. We cannot find any equity in the present case that will enable us to hold that the respondent Ram Lal Singh is in any way liable to the plaintiff for a share of the costs that were recovered from him. The appeal is dismissed with costs to Ram Lal Singh.

It is to be noted that the action of the plaintiff is directed solely against Ram Lal Singh and not against the other respondents. This is clearly admitted before us in open Court.

Appeal dismissed.

Per Abdur Rahim, J. (Oldfield, J. dissenting).—The High Court has jurisdiction to expunge irrelevant and scandalous matters in the judgments of Courts subordinate to it under section 107 of the Government of India Act, 1915. Such powers are of extremely wide character but must be exercised in extremely exceptional cases, and with great caution. They are covered by the expression 'superintendence' in the section. [p. 981, col. 2; p. 982, col. 1.]

Ramabadra Naidu v. Subramania Iyer, 33 Ind. Cas. 608; 3 L. W. 282, considered.

Per Oldfield, J.—The High Court has not the power to expunge irrelevant and scandalous matters in the judgments of subordinate Courts under section 107 of the Government of India Act, 1915, especially when the application to expunge them is made by persons who are not parties to the proceedings. [p. 982, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.

ABDUR RAHIM, J.—I have had the advantage of reading the judgment which has been just delivered by my learned brother, and I agree that the petition ought to be dismissed, though not on the ground on which he has proceeded.

I am of opinion that we have jurisdiction to direct the expunging of irrelevant and scandalous matters in the judgment of the Subordinate Court under section 107 of the Government of India Act of 1915. The powers of superintendence vested in the High Court are of extremely wide character, and it seems to me that if we find a case in which a Subordinate Court has gone out of its way to introduce matters in its judgment which are absolutely irrelevant and scandalous in their nature, we can remove those passages from the judgment, so that they may not be circulated and published to the prejudice of persons who are or are not concerned in the suit either as a party or as a witness. It is quite true that, as pointed out, there is no precedent for such action except in a recent case (C. R. P. No. 888 of 1916), to which I was a party. There the question of jurisdiction was not discussed, though it was assumed that we had jurisdiction to delete certain passages from the judgment of the Subordinate Court. On the other hand, the question was considered in another recent case (C. R. P. Nos. 587, 588 and A. A. O. Nos. 205 and 206 of 1914) [Ramabhadra Naidu v. Subramania Iyer (1)] by Sadasiva Aiyar and Moore, JJ., in which Sadasiva Aiyar, J., expressed his opinion affirming our jurisdiction. I quite realise that it must be in extremely exceptional cases that the High Court will be called upon to interfere in a matter of this sort, and I am entirely of opinion that we ought to act with the greatest caution in making such an order as has been applied for in this case. On the merits, however, the application, in my opinion, must fail, because it could not be said that the remarks which are objected to were altogether irrelevant in the view which the Subordinate Judge took of the case. I do not suggest for a moment that those remarks were justified upon the evidence and in fact. We have expressed our opinion in the judgment in the appeal that they were not justified at all. But, on the other hand, it could not be said that the observations were clearly irrelevant and did not bear on the merits of the case. For these reasons I agree in dismissing the petition.

OLDFIELD, J.—In this petition we are asked to expunge certain portions of the judgment of the Subordinate Judge of Kumbakonam, in Original Suit No. 79 of 1914, which has come before us on appeal. We are asked to do so by a person, who was not a party to that suit and was merely the Vakil of a party, in the exercise of our alleged powers under section 107, 5 & 6 Geo. V, C. 61.

It has not been shown that any Court in England has ever given similar relief or that any other High Court has done so, either under the provisions above specified or the corresponding section 15, 25 & 26 Vic. C. 104. In this High Court such relief has been given only, so far as we have been shown, in one recent case, C. R. P. No. 888 of 1916, but without discussion of the Court's power to give it, whilst in another C. R. P. Nos. 587, 588 and A. A. O. Nos. 205 and 206 of 1914 [Ramabhadra Naidu v. Subramania Iyer (1)], one learned Judge held that it might be given in suitable cases and the other refused to express an opinion; and in the latter case it may be observed that the appellants petitioners were parties to the proceedings. There is accordingly no course of authority binding on us in petitioner's favour; and the absence of such authority is further material as justifying a doubt whether the exercise of the power in question is essential to the performance of our duty of superintendence under the provision above referred to.

In the absence of authority the matter must be decided on general principles. It seems to me, with great respect, that the exercise of this power is not necessary and would not be advisable and that, therefore, the right to ask for it should not be newly recognised at this date as covered by the general term 'superintendence'. It has not been shown that any function resembling this has ever been treated as covered by it. It is true that in some cases, to which (as I understand my learned brother) he would confine interference, the judgment may contain irrelevant matter, scandalous or blasphemous, by which strangers to the proceedings may be aggrieved and which, as in the instance above referred to, could justly be expunged without investigation of any fact in issue. But such cases will be very rare; and it is not necessary on their account to authorise a course of procedure, which would involve us in the risk of grave inconvenience. For there would be entailed, firstly, in many cases the novel recognition of the right to the Court's assistance in favour of persons not parties to or directly interested in any proceeding before it; secondly, the investigation of many cases, in which the relevancy and correctness of the observations complained of would not be ascertainable readily or without enquiry into the merits. Such inquiry would frequently, it is to be feared, be asked for on account of personal enmity against the Judge; and its result would not necessarily be in any degree convincing, since it would have been reached without the assistance of any one interested to oppose the petition.

In these circumstances, I would not interpret the Court's duty of superintendence as covering the grant of the relief asked for by petitioner and I would, therefore, dismiss his petition without expressing an opinion on its merits.

PUNJAB CHIEF COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL NO. 1935 OF 1914.

April 11, 1918.

Present:—Mr. Justice Scott-Smith.

GOPI DAS—DEFENDANT—APPELLANT
versus

LAL DAS—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 92—Suit for removal of old mahant, appointment of new mahant and vesting of trust property in new mahant, maintainability of—Parties, necessary—Court-fee payable.

Where certain persons, who were entitled to elect the mahant of a Dera, decided that for certain reasons the defendant, the old mahant, was no longer fit for the office of mahant and elected another person as the new mahant and thereupon a suit was brought under section 92 of the Civil Procedure Code for the removal of the defendant, who was in charge of the trust properties, from the office of mahant, the appointment of a new mahant and the vesting of the trust properties in the new mahant:

Held, (1) that the suit was properly brought under section 92 of the Civil Procedure Code; [p. 984, col. 1.]

(2) that the new mahant elect was not a necessary party to the suit; [p. 984, col. 2.]

(3) that it was not necessary to stamp the plaint with a Court-fee stamp calculated ad valorem on the value of the trust property, inasmuch as the plaintiffs were seeking nothing for themselves but merely the removal of the defendant from the office of mahant, which would involve his ejectment from the immoveable property of which he was in possession as mahant. [p. 984, col. 2.]

Miscellaneous second appeal from the order of the Additional Divisional Judge, Lahore, dated the 22nd July 1914.

Mr. Beechey, for the Appellant.

Mr. B. Bevan Petman, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The suit, out of which the present appeal arises, was brought by the two plaintiffs with the permission of the Collector under section 92, Civil Procedure Code. The trust property in suit is connected with a religious institution in Kasur, known as Dera Bawa Hari Har, of which defendant Gopi Das was said to have been elected Mahant some eighteen years before suit. The prayers in the plaint were—

(a) that the defendant be removed from the Mahantship of the temple of Dera Bawa Hari Har and ejected from the property attached thereto;

(b) that Pritam Das or some other Beragi Sadhu be appointed Mahant in accordance with the custom of the Dera, and that it may be directed that the waqf property be made over to the new Mahant.

The first Court held that Pritam Das was a necessary plaintiff, as there was an allegation in the plaint that he was elected a Mahant in place of Gopi Das, and secondly that there should be a Court-fee on the plaint calculated ad valorem on the value of the property attached to the shrine. It directed the amendment of the plaint by adding Pritam Das as a plaintiff and by making up the Court-fee, and as its order was not complied with, it rejected the plaint. On appeal it was held by the Additional Divisional Judge of Lahore that Pritam Das was not a necessary plaintiff and that the plaint was properly stamped. He accordingly accepted the appeal, set aside the order of the lower Court and remanded the case to the first Court for decision on the merits.

Defendant has filed a second appeal in this Court. Attention is drawn in argument to paragraph 7 of the plaint, in which it is stated that the Beragi Sadhus in their general meeting and with the concurrence of the Mahant of Bahali, all assembled at Kasur, had unanimously declared the defendant unfit for Mahantship and had in his place elected Pritam Das to be Mahant. It is argued that according to this statement the defendant has been dismissed from the office of Mahant and Pritam Das has been elected in his stead and that, therefore, there can be no suit for removal of the Mahant or for appointment of a new one within the meaning of section 92, Civil Procedure Code. It is further argued that as defendant is no longer the Mahant or trustee his possession of the trust property is unlawful, that he is in other words a trespasser and that any person suing to dispossess him from the trust property must sue on a fully stamped plaint. Defendant is admittedly acting as Mahant of the shrine even though Pritam Das may have been elected in his place. In the words of the lower Appellate Court, Gopi Das is still de facto Mahant of the shrine even though Pritam Das may be de jure Mahant. What I understand the plaintiffs to say in their plaint is this. For certain reasons stated, the persons who were entitled to elect the Mahant have decided that the defendant is no longer fit for the office of Mahant and have elected Pritam Das as the new Mahant. They have not as yet removed Gopi Das from the office of Mahant. For the purpose of his removal they have brought this case and invoked the aid of the Court. I am quite unable to agree with Mr. Beechey, Counsel for the appellant, that the effect of the resolution referred to in paragraph 7 of the plaint was to remove the defendant from the office of Mahant. He is still acting as Mahant and is in charge of the trust property and in order to remove him it was necessary for a suit to be brought. I hold that the suit is one such as is contemplated by section 92, Civil Procedure Code.

In Ghazoffar Husain Khan v. Yawar Husain (1), the following passage occurs:—

"A suit instituted under section 539 is not a suit in which plaintiffs claim or can claim for themselves possession of the trust property. They merely ask the Court to vest the trust property in trustees duly appointed to manage the trust and to take it out of the hands of trustees who have been guilty of mismanagement. No change in the beneficial ownership is sought. The Court has undoubtedly power under the section to vest the trust property in the new trustees and it seems to me reasonably clear that the Court may direct a trustee who is being removed from the trusteeship to make over the trust property to the new trustee or trustees. As regards the Court-fee, in many cases the costs of such a suit as this fall on the trust estate, and it seems to me that a decree in such a suit works no change in the beneficial ownership of the property, it would be a hardship to impose upon the trust estate the payment of the ordinary Court fee payable in respect of a hostile suit for recovery of land on title."

In Yad Ali v. Mubarak Ali (2), the following passage occurs:

"The prayer for consequential relief in the amended plaint, however, it will be observed, did not take the form of a prayer for delivery to the plaintiffs of possession of the mosque and of the immoveable property appertaining thereto, because had it taken that form, the plaintiffs would have had to pay an ad valorem Court-fee stamp upon the value of the said property, which in this case was found by the first Court, after a remand by the lower Appellate Court, to be Rs. 5,648-10-0. In fact the defendant took the objection that the Court-fee stamp affixed by the plaintiffs was insufficient, but the first Court decided, and decided we think rightly, upon the authority of the ruling in Mahant Mangal Das Mahant Narinjan Das (3), that since the plaintiffs simply sought the removal of the defendant from the office of mutwalli, which would involve his ejectment from the immoveable property of which he was in possession in that capacity, and did not seek possession of the property for themselves, full stamp could not be levied upon the value of the said property."

Following these authorities I am of opinion that it was not necessary to stamp the plaint with a Court-fee stamp calculated ad valorem on the value of the trust property. The plaintiffs seek nothing for themselves in the present suit. They seek the removal of the defendant from the office of Mahant, which would involve his ejectment from the immoveable property of which he is in possession in that capacity.

I also fully agree with the lower Appellate Court that there is no necessity for Pritam Das to be joined as a plaintiff in the present suit. The suit has been correctly instituted by two of the three persons to whom the Collector gave leave to sue under section 92, Civil Procedure Code, and there is no sufficient reason why they should not alone maintain the suit. Mr. Beechey has contended that defendant claims part of the property in suit as his own private property. No plea to this effect has as yet been made by the defendant, so it is not necessary for me to deal with it. It will be dealt with by the Court which tries the suit. Mr Petman who appears for the respondent has brought to my notice that one of the original plaintiffs has died. He cites Parameswarem Munpu v. Narayanan Namboodri (4) as authority for the proposition that the death of one of the plaintiffs in a suit under section 92, Civil Procedure Code, would not cause the abatement of the suit. As at present advised, I am disposed to agree with this ruling. But the point is not before me directly and if it arises, it should be disposed of by the Court trying the case.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

BADULLA MANDAL AND OTHERS

—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Landlord and tenant—Tenure-holder, whether can change status to prejudice of tenants—Estoppel by pleadings, whether can be proved by copy of judgment which contains summary of pleadings.

A tenure-holder cannot be allowed to change his status to that of a raiyat to the prejudice of tenants on the land at the time of the change and even as regards tenants who enter upon the land after the change, their status would not be prejudicially affected if the change in the status of the tenure-holder is only in respect of an undivided portion of his tenancy and not in respect of the whole of that tenancy. [p. 987, col. 1.]

A plaintiff who wants to show that the defendants are estopped from raising a certain plea by reason of their pleadings in a previous suit between the parties cannot do so by merely producing a copy of the Court's judgment in the previous suit which contains a summary of the pleadings in that suit, but must produce the written statement filed by the defendants in that suit. [p. 987, col. 1.]

Appeals against the decrees of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Rajshahi, dated the 11th July 1916, affirming the decrees of the Munsif, Naogoan, dated the 24th May 1915.

FACTS.—Iswar Chandra Ghose and Bhagwan Chandra Ghose had a tenancy of 184 bighas (which according to the plaintiff was an occupancy jote and according to the defendants a tenure) under the entire body of landlords from before 1890. In 1890 the Ghoses executed 3 kabuliyats, each for less than 100 bighas, in respect of these lands, which on measurement were then found to be about 250 bighas, in favour of Bindeshwari Debi, the proprietor of a 2/3rd share. Before the execution of these kabuliyats the Ghoses had in 1883 mortgaged these lands to one Tarini Kanta Chowdhury, who subsequently purchased them in execution of his own mortgage decree. Later on Tarini Kanta sold his auction-purchased lands to one Siva Sahai in the year 1894. After the mortgage to Tarini Kanta the Ghoses again mortgaged these lands in 1892 to the aforesaid Bindeshwari Debi, the proprietor of a 2/3rd share. At the sale in execution of this second mortgage decree the plaintiff purchased them in 1897. In 1903 the plaintiff brought a redemption suit against Siva Sahai Sukul. All the present defendants were made parties to that suit, which was decreed. Subsequently the plaintiff redeemed. In the year 1911 the plaintiff instituted suits for arrears of rent against the defendants, which were all decreed. The present suits were brought in the year 1913 for ejecting the defendants from their holdings.

Babu Mohendra Nath Roy, (with him Babu Profulla Chandra Chakraverty), for the Appellants—In the mortgage-deed in favour of Tarini Kanta the Ghoses described their tenancy as a transferable occupancy jote. So the status of Siva Sahai who was a transferee from Tarini Kanta was that of an occupancy raiyat. The lower Appellate Court has found that the defendants were inducted on the land by Siva Sahai Sukul. They can't now be heard to say that their landlord was a tenure-holder and not an occupancy raiyat. The plaintiff appellant is now in the position of Siva Sahai.

The three kabuliyats in favour of Bindeshwari, the 2/3rd landlord, were executed before the defendants came on the land. In these kabuliyats also the Ghoses described their holdings as occupancy jotes. The acceptance of rent by the remaining 1/3rd landlord at the rates fixed in these kabuliyats amounted to a ratification on his part of the sub-division of the holding into three separate occupancy jotes. Oral evidence to show that the lands formed a tenure and not occupancy jotes, was inadmissible.

It appears from the judgment in the rent suits brought by the appellant against the respondents that the latter resisted the plaintiff's claim for rent in those suits, mainly on the ground that the occupancy jotes purchased by the plaintiff were not transferable. This admission on the part of the defendants as regards the character of the tenancy was binding on them. The written statement of the defendants in those suits ought to have been put in. But the summary of the pleadings as given in the judgment is also admissible to show the nature of the defence.

Babu Krishna Kamal Maitra, for the Respondents.—The first point was not taken in either of the Courts below. The appellant is not entitled to raise it in this Court for the first time. Further it is not clear from the mortgage deed in favour of Tarini Kanta that what was mortgaged was an occupancy jote. The words used to describe the tenancy are jote jama.

As regards the second point, the original tenancy of the Ghoses was of more than 100 bighas. The presumption is that it was a tenure. A tenure-holder cannot be allowed to change his status to the prejudice of the tenants on the land. Jagabandhu Saha v. Magnamoyi Dassi (1).

As regards the third point, the judgment in the rent suits is no evidence of the contents of the written statement filed by the defendants in those suits. The written statement ought to have been put in. Further the defence set forth in the written statement was meant to meet the allegations contained in the plaint. It cannot bind the defendants in the present suit.

Babu Profulla Chandra Chakraverty replied.

JUDGMENT.

WALMSLEY, J.—These appeals are preferred by the plaintiff: he brought the suits from which they arise to eject the defendants from various parcels of land, which they hold under him. His case is that the defendants are under raiyats, and that his own interest is that of a raiyat. The Courts below have found that the plaintiff served notices on the defendants, but they have upheld the defence plea that the plaintiff is a tenure-holder and that the defendants are raiyats, not under-raiyats.

The learned Subordinate Judge has compiled a very careful narrative of the transactions affecting the tenancy since 1888 when the Ghoses, who may be called the plaintiff's predecessors, executed a mortgage in favour of one Tarini Kanta, and it is unnecessary to reproduce the narrative in this judgment.

Three points have been pressed on behalf of the plaintiff, namely, (1) that it was not open to the lower Courts to go into the conduct of the parties for the purpose of determining the origin of the tenancy.

(2) That the kabuliyats executed by the Ghoses speak of raiyati interests and oral evidence could not be admitted to vary the terms of the contracts.

(3) That if any presumption arises from the area of the holding, it is rebutted by the admissions of the defendants made in certain rent suits of 1911.

Regarding the first argument it is said that the Ghoses, when mortgaging the tenancy to Tarini Kant, described it as a jote jama in which they had a transferable occupancy right; Tarini bought the holding in execution of a decree on the mortgage: Siva Sahai bought from Tarini, and the defendants were induced by Siva Sahai, and, therefore, they cannot deny that the interest of the Ghoses was that of occupancy raiyats. It is pointed out, however, on behalf of the respondents that this argument was not put before either of the lower Courts. I think, therefore, that we should not allow it to be urged in this Court; and I may add that the expressions used in the mortgage are wanting in exactitude.

(1) 36 Ind. Cas. 884; 22 C. W. N. 89; 24 C. L. J. 363; 44 C. 555.

RAMMAN LAL V. RAM GOPAL.

As for the second contention, the kabuliyats executed by the Ghoses in 1890 are described as ordinary raiya kabuliyats. The learned Subordinate Judge, however, finds as a fact that the tenants were inducted on the land by Siva Sahai before the earliest date at which Jnanada Sukul can possibly be regarded as having agreed to the division of the tenancy effected by the kabuliyats. It is conceded that a tenure-holder cannot be allowed to change his status to that of a raiya to the prejudice of tenants on the land at the time of the change, and it follows that, to the extent of Jnanada Sukul's share, the change could not be operative as against the tenants. It is suggested that the change could be sanctioned by Bindeshwari and was sanctioned to the extent of her share at the time of the execution of the kabuliyats, that is, a few years before the defendants entered on the land. We have not been referred to any authority for this proposition, and it is one which I should be very unwilling to accept in a case like the present where the kabuliyats do not refer to specific land, but to an undivided share in land. I think this argument also fails.

With respect to the third contention, the plaintiff took the extraordinary step of producing a copy of the Court's judgment instead of the defendants' written statement. The judgment contains a summary of the pleadings no doubt, but if the plaintiff wanted to show that the defendants are estopped from pleading that the plaintiff is a tenure-holder, he should have produced the written statement. In any event, however, it is clear that the defendants were meeting the particular allegations made by the plaintiff, and when they pleaded that occupancy rights were not transferable, they did not admit that the plaintiff's right was that of a raiya and not that of a tenure-holder.

In my opinion, the arguments urged on behalf of the plaintiff cannot be sustained, and on the very definite finding of fact recorded by the learned Subordinate Judge the appeals must fail. They are dismissed with costs.

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Hardoi, dated the 6th April 1916.

The Hon'ble Pandit Gokaran Nath Misra and Mr J N. Chak, for the Appellants.

Mr. A. P. Sen, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiffs-appellants for the recovery of possession of the mortgaged property. The mortgage in question was effected by Ram Narain, the father of defendant No. 1 and father-in-law of defendant No. 2 who is the widow of another son of his, in favour of Narain Prasad, the predecessor-in-interest of the plaintiffs, on the 11th October 1905. The amount secured by the mortgage was Rs. 12,500, out of which Rs. 7,000 were credited towards a prior mortgage of the 12th March 1902 held by Narain Prasad, Rs. 1,091-8-3 were credited towards interest due thereon, Rs. 5,000 were left for payment to Banwari Lal in satisfaction of his decree against the mortgagor dated the 20th November 1904, Rs. 2,911 were credited towards a bahi debt due to the mortgagee and the balance was paid in cash before the Sub-Registrar. The properties mortgaged comprised the entire villages of Sikandarpur and Ratanpur situated in Tahsil Aligarh, district Farrukhabad, and the mortgagee right in a grove standing in Chak Bamiari, district Hardoi. The registration of the mortgage deed was effected in the latter district. The mortgage-deed provided for the payment of the mortgage money—with interest thereon at 6 per cent. per annum compoundable half-yearly—within five years, and one of the conditions in the mortgage-deed was that if the mortgagor failed to pay the said mortgage money within five years, he shall deliver possession of the mortgaged properties to the mortgagee.

On the 21st April 1913 the learned Subordinate Judge decreed the claim of the plaintiffs for possession of the grove but dismissed it in regard to the remaining properties mortgaged, holding that the registration of the mortgage-deed, so far as it affected the latter properties, was invalid. On appeal this Court set aside that decree and remanded the case to the Court below for its decision on the merits after determination of such of the issues as had remained undecided. The only issues on which this Court in common with the Court below expressed its findings, were those relating to the nature of the interest which the mortgagor held in the mortgaged properties, the validity of the registration of the deed of gift and the obtaining of the deed of mortgage by fraud and undue influence. The finding of this Court and of the Court below on the point last mentioned was that no fraud or undue influence was established. On the other matters the findings of this Court disagreed with those of the learned Subordinate Judge and were to the effect that the Farrukhabad property was acquired out of joint family funds possessed by the family of which Bhajan Lal and Ram Narain were members, and in which Banwari Lal and Ram Gopal obtained rights as co-parceners upon their birth, that Banwari Lal had relinquished his share under an amicable arrangement by which he was allowed a sum of Rs. 5,000 in lieu of his rights and that the registration of the deed of mortgage was not invalid. The matters which remained for determination, were whether the mortgagor had received the consideration of the mortgage deed in suit, whether defendant No. 1 was benefited by the loan and was bound by it and whether the covenant to put the mortgagee in possession of the mortgaged properties, if the mortgage money was not paid within 5 years, was enforceable against him.

The learned Subordinate Judge came to the conclusion that the consideration paid by the mortgagee did not exceed Rs. 6,232-7-9, out of which Rs. 497-7-9 were shown not to have been taken for the benefit of the minor and the rest represented antecedent debts for which the minor was liable. He refused, however, to give a decree for possession of the mortgaged villages, but decreed the claim for the recovery of Rs. 5,735 with interest thereon at the stipulated rate by the sale of the mortgaged properties.

The findings of the learned Subordinate Judge on these points cannot be sustained. He considered that the sum of Rs. 3,000 principal and Rs. 1,091-8-3 interest credited in the mortgage-deed in suit towards an earlier mortgage of the 12th March 1902 was not really due, because the alleged earlier mortgage was fictitious. The reason suggested for the execution of the fictitious mortgage by Hulas Singh (D. W. No. 8) is that there was a quarrel between Ram Narain and his son, Banwari Lal, and that the former said that he had executed the deed in favour of one of his relations to defeat the claim which the latter might bring for partition. On the 15th August 1904 a suit for partition was brought by Banwari Lal (Exhibit 42). It was compromised on the 30th November 1904 (Exhibit 44), whereby Banwari Lal agreed to accept Rs. 5,000 in lieu of his claim to a share in the family properties. That sum of Rs. 5,000 was paid to Banwari Lal out of the consideration of the mortgage in suit, and if the mortgage of the 12th March 1902 was fictitious, there is no reason why after the claim of Banwari Lal had been amicably settled, the money due on that mortgage should have been acknowledged and credited in the mortgage in suit. Hulas Singh holds a lease of one of the villages in suit from Ram Narain and he is naturally interested in helping his lessor to defeat the claim of the mortgagees. He alleges that he was present at the time of the registration of the aforesaid mortgage and learnt there from Ram Narain that it was fictitious, having gone there to pay the revenue due by him: but no instalment of revenue is generally payable in March. The statement of Hulas Singh cannot, therefore, be trusted.

Another witness produced by the defendants to prove that the earlier mortgage was fictitious is Jagannath (D. W. No. 2). He is an attesting witness to the said mortgage. He states that Ram Narain executed it to bring pressure on Banwari Lal who was quarrelling with him. He further states that Ram Narain gave him Rs. 2,550 from his own house and that the said money was shown before the Sub-Registrar as having been paid by the mortgagee and was then returned to him. The falsity of the former statement is apparent from the fact that after the claim of Banwari Lal was settled by compromise, the mortgage of the 12th March 1902 was credited in the mortgage-deed in suit and the falsity of the latter is equally apparent, because if the mortgage-deed was fictitious, there was more reason for Ram Narain to have concealed the fact from outsiders than to have published it by giving the money to be shown before the Sub-Registrar to such a person. He is not a resident of the village in which Ram Narain lived. He was at one time a chaukidar but was dismissed from service for making a false report (Exhibit 49). He admits that his brother was for sometime in the service of Ram Narain. No reliance can be placed on his statement.

On behalf of the plaintiffs Makhan (P. W. No. 3) has been examined. He states that the mortgage in question was executed in his presence and was attested by him, that Rs. 2,550 were paid before the Sub-Registrar and the receipt of the rest acknowledged by Ram Narain. He is related to one of the plaintiffs but as his statement is corroborated by the mortgage-deed (Exhibit 3) and the endorsement made thereon by the Sub-Registrar, there is no ground for discrediting his testimony.

The learned Subordinate Judge observes that the plaintiff Ramman Lal did not come forward in the witness-box to give evidence and that the non-production of the original mortgage deed is also suspicious. But Mangladin, one of the plaintiffs, has given evidence in the case and has produced account-books, proving that Rs. 450 were advanced on different dates to Ram Narain prior to the execution of the said mortgage for the expenses of some litigation which was then going on in respect of his estate in Farrukhabad (O. P. 224) and that the balance was paid before the Sub-Registrar. It is suggested that another mortgage-deed executed by Ram Narain in favour of Ramman Lal on the 12th February 1894 for Rs. 5,000 was held by the Subordinate Judge of Farrukhabad, in a suit filed for the recovery of the money due on the same, to have been fictitious (Exhibit A-18). But no inference can be drawn from the nature of the transaction, represented by that mortgage, in regard to the mortgage of the 12th March 1902. Mangladin explains that the original mortgage deed of the 12th March 1902 was returned to Ram Narain when the money due on it was credited in the mortgage-deed in suit. The defendants have not produced that mortgage-deed and the failure of the plaintiffs to produce it cannot in the circumstances be construed as evidence to establish that it was fictitious and was in the custody of the plaintiffs. On the evidence adduced, there can be no doubt that the mortgage of the 12th March 1902 represented a genuine debt due by Ram Narain and as it was an antecedent debt, there was a pious obligation on Ram Gopal, the minor son of Ram Narain, to pay it; and the mortgage effected in lieu of such a debt by Ram Narain is binding on him.

The next item of consideration compromising the mortgage in suit is the sum of Rs. 5,000 paid by Banwari Lal on the 10th January 1906 (Exhibit 2) in pursuance of the compromise arrived at in the suit filed by Banwari Lal against Ram Narain. The effect of this compromise was to relieve the family property from the claim brought by Banwari Lal and to enlarge the share of Ram Narain and his son, Ram Gopal. By virtue of that compromise, Banwari Lal gave up all possible interest in the property which might accrue to him in favour of Ram Narain (Exhibit 44) and as the defendant Ram Gopal was the only other son of Ram Narain, he was obviously benefited by the compromise and the loan taken from the plaintiffs to comply with its terms.

The third item of consideration is a bahi debt of Rs. 2,911, which is sufficiently proved by the evidence of Mangladin and the account-books produced. The learned Subordinate Judge found that there was corroborative evidence to prove items worth Rs. 735; but the letters on which he relies, show that there was a general course of dealings between the parties from a long time. On some occasions Ram Narain sent letters asking for specific sums of money. On other occasions, he might have gone to borrow the money or might have obtained it otherwise through some messenger. The mere fact that letters are not forthcoming in regard to the other items, is not necessarily evidence of the fact that no money was taken to Ram Narain. Ganesh Prasad (D. W. No. 5), who is a cousin of Ram Narain used to say to him that he had bahi khata accounts with Ramman Lal and that he took loans from him from time to time as necessity arose (O. P. 85). On the 23rd August Ram Narain wrote a letter to Ramman Lal asking for an advance of Rs. 2,500 (Exhibit 26). On the 26th August 1901 he acknowledged the receipt of Rs. 100 (Exhibit 27). Between the 29th June 1902 and the 31st January 1903 he wrote various letters, asking for different sums of money (Exhibits 17, 18, 19 and 28). On the 26th February 1903 and again on the 28th December 1903 he wrote letters acknowledging the receipt of different items (Exhibits 16 and 20). On the 25th January 1904 he asked for a loan of Rs. 100 (Exhibit 21). On the 27th March 1904 he acknowledged the receipt of another sum of Rs. 100 (Exhibit 29). On the 13th October 1904 he acknowledged the receipt of another similar sum (Exhibit 22). On the 3rd June 1905 sometime after the execution of the mortgage-deed in suit, Ram Narain wrote to Ramman Lal, saying that he was unable to pay the interest demanded (Exhibit 30). By the terms of the mortgage the plaintiffs were entitled to claim possession of the mortgaged property, if the mortgage money was not paid within five years. Ram Narain wrote, suggesting that possession might be taken over one or both the villages mortgaged, provision being made for his maintenance, if both were taken (Exhibit 30). On the 1st July 1907 Ganesh Prasad similarly wrote that one or both the villages mortgaged might be taken in possession in lieu of interest (Exhibit 24). On the 23rd July 1907 Ram Narain wrote again, asking Ramman Lal to take possession of one of the villages (Exhibit 23) and sent other letters asking for a further loan of Rs. 50 for the marriage of his daughter (Exhibits 25 and 31). On the 24th of January 1910 Ram Narain applied to the Collector asking that the Court of Wards might take a mortgage of his estate and pay his debts (Exhibit 48) and stating that he owed Rs. 16,000 to Ramman Lal and others. After the death of Ram Narain, Ganesh Prasad again wrote on behalf of his widow to Ramman Lal, asking him to give six months' time for the payment of the money due to him (Exhibit 32). On the 2nd March 1912 he asked Pandit Lajja Ram, a Deputy Collector, to intercede on behalf of the defendants in inducing Ramman Lal to wait for four months for the repayment of the mortgage-money (Exhibit 33). Ganesh Prasad admitted having sent the letters produced by the plaintiffs.

The accounts filed show that Rs. 4,612-13-0 were due by Ram Narain on Phagun, Sudi 4, 1960. Ram Narain struck the balance and signed it with his own hand (Exhibit 12). Thereafter other items were borrowed from time to time as shown by the day-book. The total amount due was thus Rs. 7,002-8-3 inclusive of Rs. 3,000 principal and Rs. 1,091-8-3 interest payable on the earlier mortgage. The whole of this amount was credited in the mortgage-deed in suit.

The account books filed by the plaintiffs were kept in the regular course of business and there is no sufficient reason for supposing that the debts entered in them were not genuine. Apart from the statement of Ram Narain in the mortgage-deed in suit wherein the existence of the said debts was admitted by him, the evidence produced in corroboration of the same is sufficient. Ramman Lal (sic) was admittedly the manager of the family comprising himself and his minor son, Ram Gopal, and as pointed out by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Suraj Narain v. Ratan Lal (1), the statements made by him are admissible in evidence against the other members of the family.

A sum of Rs. 497.7.9, representing the balance of the consideration, was paid before the Sub-Registrar. There is evidence to show that that money was taken by Ram Narain for the expenses of the investiture of his son, Ram Gopal, with the sacred thread. According to Shiam Lal, one of the witnesses for the defendants, the ceremony was attended by 500 or 600 persons. Mangla Prasad states that the amount aforesaid was taken by Ram Narain for the expenses of that ceremony. In the mutation proceeding, consequent on the death of Ram Narain, Ganesh Prasad (D. W. No. 5), who was present at that ceremony, admitted that the debts due by Ram Narain were incurred by him to meet the expense of the maintenance of his family, the marriage of his daughters and the janeo of his son.

We have no doubt, therefore, that the entire consideration represented by the mortgage-deed in suit was taken either to pay antecedent debts or to meet a valid family necessity. The learned Counsel for the defendants respondents contends that an antecedent debt incurred on the security of the family property ought not to be taken into account in determining the family necessity, and reliance is placed in support of that contention on the observations of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (2); but what their Lordships seem to lay down is that an antecedent debt secured by a mortgage might be open to the same objection as a subsequent mortgage, effected to pay that debt. They nowhere say that the personal obligation compromised in every simple mortgage cannot be separated from the mortgage debt, and that though the mortgage may in certain circumstances be invalid, the personal obligation to repay the money may not amount to an antecedent debt, which a son may be under an obligation to pay if it was incurred for purposes neither illegal nor immoral. There is no allegation in this case that any of the debts comprised in the mortgage in suit was incurred for purposes illegal or immoral.

The plaintiffs ask for a decree for possession in enforcement of the terms comprised in the mortgage; but the learned Subordinate Judge gave them a decree for the money which, according to his finding, the defendants were liable to pay. The plaintiffs had, however, a right to insist on getting possession, to which they had become entitled in consequence of the failure of the mortgagors to pay the mortgage money within 5 years; and as held in Jawahir Singh v. Chandika Bakhsh (3) and Muhammad Sher Khan v. Swami Dayal (4), a decree for money ought not to have been forced upon them. The plaintiffs became entitled to possession on the 11th October 1910. The present suit was filed on the 1st March 1912 and by the frivolous pleas and defences raised by the defendants, some of which found favour with the Court below, they have been kept out of possession of the mortgaged property all this time. Ganesh Prasad, a relation of the defendants, said in one of his letters that if the plaintiffs were not amenable to his suggestion, they would suffer trouble as they had suffered before, and whoever may be responsible for the attitude which the defendants took up firstly in questioning the validity of the registration and secondly in questioning the necessity for the mortgage, there can be no justification in denying to the plaintiffs the relief they ask for.

The appeal is, therefore, allowed and the claim of the plaintiffs decreed with costs here and hitherto. The defendants will, in the circumstances, bear their own costs throughout.

Appeal allowed.

QYAM-UD-DIN v. DELHI FLOUR MILLS COMPANY.

PUNJAB CHIEF COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL NO. 1287 OF 1918.

August 7, 1918.

Present:—Mr. Justice Shadi Lal and Mr. Justice LeRossignol.

QYAM-UD-DIN—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT
versus

THE DELHI FLOUR MILLS COMPANY, LTD., DELHI—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), s 7 (1), Sch. I, Art. 1, applicability of—Suit for recovery of money due after adjustment of accounts—Court-fee payable.

According to section 7, clause 1), of the Court Fees Act the fee payable in a suit for money must be according to the amount claimed.

Article 1 of Schedule I of the Court Fees Act applies only to those cases which are not otherwise provided for under the Act.

Where plaintiff sued for the recovery of Rs. 1,125-4-0 alleged to be due to him, after deducting a sum of Rs. 2,500 said to be due by him to the defendant on account of the price of certain goods) from Rs. 3,625-4-0, which he assessed as the amount of damages suffered by him by reason of the defendant's failure to perform certain contracts entered into between the parties:

Held, that the Court-fee paid ad valorem on the amount actually claimed was sufficient.

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Delhi, dated the 4th February 1918, affirming the decree of the Subordinate Judge, 2nd class, Delhi, dated the 20th August 1917, dismissing the claim.

Messrs. Abdur Rashid and Muhammad Rafi, for the Appellant.

Lala Moti Sagar, R. S., for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The sole question for determination in this appeal is whether the plaintiff has correctly valued the relief claimed by him and whether the Court-fee affixed to the plaint and the memorandum of appeal to the lower Appellate Court is adequate. The action brought by the plaintiff was for the recovery of a sum of Rs. 1,125-4-0 and on that amount he has admittedly paid ad valorem Court-fee. The plaint, however, shows that the plaintiff arrived at the amount after deducting a sum of Rs. 2,500 (said to be due by him to the defendant on account of the price of certain goods) from Rs. 3,625-4-0, which he assessed as the amount of damages suffered by him by reason of the defendant's failure to perform certain contracts entered into between the parties.

The learned District Judge holds that the bone of contention between the parties is the amount of loss said to have been suffered by the plaintiff, and that the credit allowed by him to the defendant should not be taken into consideration for the purpose of determining the Court-fee to be levied upon the plaint. We are unable to concur in this view. Section 7, clause (1), of the Court Fees Act prescribes that the fee payable in a suit for money must be according to the amount claimed. Now, the plaintiff has, as stated above, paid the Court-fee in accordance with this clause, and we are not prepared to hold that Article 1 of Schedule I of the Act, which provides that a plaint or a memorandum of appeal should bear Court-fee on the amount or value of the subject matter in dispute, militates against his contention. It is to be observed that this Article applies only to those cases which are not otherwise provided for under the Act.

There can be no manner of doubt that, in determining the sum to be awarded to the plaintiff, the Court has to adjudicate upon the amount of the loss sustained by the plaintiff on account of the breach of contracts; but we do not think that that amount should determine the value for the purpose of Court-fee. Indeed, there are many suits, e. g., those for the rendition of accounts between parties or between principals and agents or suits involving cross-demands, in which the Court has to adjudicate upon various large items in dispute between the parties, though the actual amount claimed by the plaintiff is a comparatively small sum of money. In all these suits it is the amount claimed by, or decreed to, the plaintiff which determines the Court-fee leviable on the plaint, and not the various sums which may be the subject-matter of controversy between the parties and upon which the Court may have to record its findings before arriving at the final conclusion.

For these reasons we are of opinion that the Court-fee is sufficient and that the lower Appellate Court's decree must be discharged. We accordingly accept the appeal and setting aside the decree of the District Judge remand the case for re decision. The Court-fee on the memorandum of appeal shall be refunded, and other costs shall abide the event.

Mr. H. K. Ghosh holding brief of Mr. Daya Kishen Seth, for the Appellants.

Mr. K. Dorabji, for Respondent No. 1.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this case are as follows. S. T. Williams held a decree against the seven appellants. In execution of this decree he attached and brought to sale a certain house belonging to the appellants. The house was put up to auction.
The last bid was in the name of a certain Bahadur Khan. Bahadur Khan did not, however, deposit the 25 per cent. of the purchase-money as required by Order
XXI, rule 84. A certain Ahmad Ali Shah made that deposit. Ahmad Ali Shah did not deposit this on behalf of Bahadur Khan but on behalf of himself. He subsequently deposited the remaining 75 per cent. He asserted that Bahadur Khan had purchased the house on his behalf.
Bahadur Khan subsequently ratified this statement. In the meanwhile the appellants paid up the total decretal amount.
They omitted, however, to deposit
5 per cent. of the purchase-money as required by Order XXI, rule 89. When Ahmad Ali Shah applied for confirmation of the sale, the learned Munsif confirmed the sale and his order has been upheld by the learned District Judge.

ARJUN NAIK v. LAKHAN.

I do not consider that there was any regular purchase. The sale should have been to Bahadur Khan if Bahadur Khan deposited the money. He did not do so.
The sale to Ahmad Ali Shah, in my opinion, was an irregular sale which cannot be upheld. Irrespective of the fact that the appellants did not deposit 5 per cent. of the purchase-money, the sale is a bad sale. Therefore, this appeal must succeed. I direct that the sale be set aside and that the amount deposited by Ahmad Ali Shah be returned to him. Costs on parties.

ARJUN NAIK v. LAKHAN.

An application for execution of a decree, which satisfies all the requirements of rule 11 of Order XXI of the Civil Procedure Code, but which is subsequently dismissed on account of the decree-holder's failure to file a copy of the decree within the time specified by the Court, is an application in accordance with law within the meaning of Article 182 of Schedule I of the Limitation Act and operates to save limitation. [p. 994, col. 2.]

Appeal against an order of the District Judge, Cuttack.

Mr. B. N. Sinha, for the Appellant.

Mr. S. N. Roy, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of proceedings in execution. Two questions arose, (1) whether the decree had been satisfied, and (2) whether the particular application for execution was barred by limitation. In regard to the first point there is a concurrent finding of the original Court and the Court of first appeal. We are concerned only with the second question. The application for execution was filed on the 11th May 1917. It recited that the suit had been decreed by the Munsif on the 30th April 1911, and that the appeal had been disposed of by the High Court on the 15th of May 1914. The only defects in the application when filed were that the amount of costs were stated under the heading (g) of sub-rule 2 of rule 11, Order XXI, namely, under the head "the amount with interest (if any) due upon the decree." It would have been more regular to state the amount of costs separately under heading (h) of that sub-rule. Another defect in the application as filed was that reference was made to a previous execution petition filed with reference to the original decree made by the Munsif. It is not clear whether this is or is not a defect; all that can be said is that the previous application was not an application for the execution of the decree of the High Court. So far as the actual requirements of rule 11 are concerned, all the requirements of that rule were complied with when the application was presented. It appears, however, that the Court under sub-rule 3 of that rule required the applicant to produce a certified copy of the High Court decree within fifteen days' time and on the failure of the applicant to comply the application was rejected. The learned District Judge in first] appeal has held that on the failure to comply with the order of the Court requiring a copy of the decree the application became an application not in accordance with law and was, therefore, not sufficient to save limitation. Under Article 182 of the First Schedule to the Indian Limitation Act, three years' limitation commences to run from the date of applying in accordance with law to the proper Court for execution or for some steps taken in aid of execution of the decree or order. Where no such application has been made or any such steps taken, the limitation runs from the date of the decree or order. Execution would in the present case be barred unless it is possible to say that the application in execution was made in accordance with law or a step in aid of the execution is taken.

In the case of Pachiappa Achari v. Poojali Seenan (1) it was held by the Madras High Court, an application for execution is in accordance with law although the applicant does not comply with the order of the Court requiring a copy of the decree. The same view was taken by the Allahabad High Court in Raghunandan Lal v. Badan Singh (2). I am of opinion that a correct view was taken in these two decisions, namely, that the questions whether the application is in accordance with law or not, must be determined with regard to what the law requires to be done at the time when the application is made, and in order to ascertain whether the application is in accordance with law it is not permissible to consider what the law requires to be done after the application has been made. With the exception of informalities to which I have above referred, which would be excused under the rule long ago established by the Calcutta High Court that mere matters of informalities are disregarded, the application was in accordance with law at the time it was made. We have been referred to sub-rule 2 of rule 17, Order XXI, which provides, where an application has been amended within time under the order of the Court, it is deemed to be an application in accordance with law and presented on the date when it was first presented. We have been asked to hold this as meaning that where a Court requires a copy of the decree to be filed and the copy is not supplied in time, the original application should be deemed to be not in accordance with law. This is not what the sub rule says. The intention of the sub rule is to relax the law in favour of the decree-holder, it is not possible to interpret it in the direction of making the law more strict against the decree-holder. In these circumstances this appeal must be allowed. The order of the District Judge is set aside and that of the Mansif restored. The appellants are entitled to costs, one gold mohur.

*Bengal Land Revenue Sales Act (XI B. C. of 1859), ss.
3, 5, 6, 33—Sale for arrears of Government revenue—“Illegality” and “irregularity,” distinction between—
whether necessary.*

Failure to notify in the vernacular Government Gazette the sale of an estate, the Government revenue of which exceeds Rs. 500, is not an illegality which per se vitiates the sale as having been made “contrary to the provisions” of Act XI of 1859. [p. 996, col. 2.]

Semle.—It is a sufficient compliance with paragraph 2 of section 6 of the Act if the sale is notified in the official Gazette published at Calcutta. [p. 996, col. 2.]

Appeal against the judgment and decree of the Calcutta High Court (Mr. Justice Richardson and Mr. Justice Newbould), dated the 1st July 1913, reported as 20 Ind. Cas. 423, reversing a judgment and decree of the Subordinate Judge, Cuttack, dated the 30th March 1911.

FACTS.—Plaintiffs were suing a trespasser to recover possession of their Zemindari in the Balasore District of Orissa.

Meanwhile there was default in payment of revenue and the Zemindari, the sadr-jama (revenue) of which was Rs. 1,586, was put up for sale under Act XI of 1859 and purchased by defendants. Plaintiffs brought the present suit to set aside the sale on the ground that it had not been notified in the Urya Government Gazette (although notified in that published in Calcutta). Before 1895 it was the practice to notify such sales in both Gazettes, but from 1895 to 1911 publication in the vernacular Gazette was discontinued under orders of the Local Government. The Subordinate Judge of Cuttack held that the vernacular Gazette was included in the term “official Gazette” in section 6 of Act XI of 1859, and that in view of the Full Bench ruling of Lala Mobaruck Lal v. Secretary of State (1) the omission to notify the publication in such vernacular Gazette was an illegality not cured by section 33.

He, therefore, set aside the sale.

On the question of substantial injury he observed: “Although the property was sold at a much lower than its fair price, had it been sold at a private sale, it cannot be said that the price was inadequate when it was made at a revenue sale and when the purchaser knows that he would have to plunge into litigation before getting quiet possession.” The Calcutta High Court (Richardson and Newbould, JJ.) reversed this decision: they held that the Full Bench ruling relied on by the lower Court had been practically overruled by the Privy Council decision in Gobind Lal Roy v. Ramjanam Misser (2), “the effect of which,” they observed, “is to annul to a very great extent the distinction between illegalities and irregularities”: that publication in the Calcutta Gazette was a sufficient compliance with section 6 of the Act, but that even if it were not section 33 applied to the case and that the sale could not be set aside without proof of substantial injury by reason of the irregularity complained of.

Hence this appeal.

section 33 of the Act, but even if that section applies, the plaintiffs have suffered substantial injury. As to this there are concurrent findings against us, but the first Court has adopted a wrong test of what is a fair price. Our main ground, however, is that the Subordinate Judge was right in holding that the failure to notify the sale in the Urya Gazette was an illegality which in itself vitiated the sale. The Act should be construed generously in favour of those whose property is sold. "Gazette" in section 6 includes Gazettes: the Legislature did not mean one Gazette only in a language which nine-tenths of the people do not understand. Lala Mobaruck Lal v. Secretary of State (1) is an express authority in my favour, and Gobind Lal Roy v. Ramjanam Misser (2), though there are observations of the Board against me, was decided on an entirely different point, viz., that the ground of complaint had not been taken before the Commissioner.

Their Lordships intimated to Mr. Kenworthy Brown, who appeared for Respondents, that they did not desire to hear argument but would like a reference to any further authorities. He referred to Tasudduk Rasul Khan v. Ahmad Husain (3).

[LORD SHAW.—That is a complete negation of the Indian case cited.]

JUDGMENT.

LORD SHAW.—This is an appeal from a judgment and decree of the High Court at Calcutta, dated the 1st July 1913*. That decree reversed a judgment and decree of the Subordinate Court of Cuttack, dated the 20th March 1911.

The suit was one to set aside a sale for arrears of Government revenue. The sale had been conducted under the provisions of the leading Statute, Act XI of the year 1859.

By section 33 of that Statute it is provided that no such sale "shall be annulled by a Court of Justice, except upon the ground of its having been made contrary to the provisions of this Act, and then only on proof that the plaintiff has sustained substantial injury by reason of the irregularity complained of." The defect of procedure which is said not to be merely an irregularity but to amount to an illegality is this: that publication of the notification of sale was necessary in the Urya vernacular Government "Gazette," circulating in the district. By order of the Lieutenant Governor, manifestly made for purposes of public convenience, it was provided that a notification of sales should not appear in that publication. On the hypothesis, which is by no means admitted, that non-publication in the "Urya Gazette" was an irregularity, the question for the Board is, whether this was an illegality, so as to make the sale "contrary to the provisions" of the Act.

It is admitted by Mr. Dunne, with his usual candour, in the argument presented to the Board, that the main provisions applicable to the conduct of sales, namely, those of sections 3, 5, and 6 of the Statute, have been, in all points, complied with. These sections provide, not only for notification in the official Gazette, which is, on the proper interpretation of those sections, the official Gazette published in Calcutta, but they also make provisions for a local mode of communication in the particular district, viz., "in the language of that district, in the office of the Collector," otherwise as set forth in section 3.

In these circumstances their Lordships are of opinion that no ground has been made out in the present case for the argument that this sale has been made by procedure contrary to the provisions of this Act.

There remains further the question of irregularity. Their Lordships are of opinion, not only that there has been no contravention of the provision of the Statute, but that, even if their view was that any irregularity had been committed, upon which it is not necessary to enter, there has been no proof offered that any substantial injury arose to the appellants in consequence of the irregularity complained of.

Their Lordships say no more upon the question, except that on the latter point all the Courts below are agreed, that is to say, that it is not established that the appellants bring forward a case of any substantial injury attributable to the irregularity which they allege. The essential conditions for setting aside the sale have accordingly not been satisfied.

Companies Act (VII of 1913), ss. 186, 199, 200, 201—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 39, 42, O. XXI, rr. 4, 5, 6, 7, 16—Order of payment—Assignment of order—Application for execution by assignee—Procedure.

Section 199 of the Companies Act enacts that any order passed by a Court under the Act is enforceable in the same manner in which a decree passed by such Court would be. Therefore, an order of payment made under section 186 of the Companies Act must be regarded as a decree and enforced as such. This means that the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code relating to the execution of decrees are applicable to the execution of such orders. [p. 998, col. 2.]

Where such an order is sought to be enforced through a Court other than the one which passed it, section 201 of the Companies Act removes the necessity for complying with the procedure laid down in section 39 and Order XXI, rules 4 and 5, of the Civil Procedure Code, dispenses with the requirements of rule 6 of the Order, and empowers the other Court to act on a certified copy of the order alone. [p. 999, col. 1.]

An assignee or transferee of the order, however, cannot make an application for the enforcement of the order without having recourse to the procedure laid down by Order XXI, rule 16 of the Civil Procedure Code, which requires that an application by a transferee of a decree for execution after substitution of his name can be entertained only by the Court which passed the decree. [p. 999, col. 2.]

Sections 200 and 201 of the Companies Act are subject to the special provisions of rule 16 of Order XXI of the Civil Procedure Code. [p. 999, col. 2.]

Miscellaneous first appeal from the order of the District Judge, Dera Ghazi Khan, dated the 9th December 1917.

Mr. Mukand Lal Puri, for the Appellant.

Mr. Sangam Lal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The Aya Ram Ginning and Press Company, Limited, of Dera Ghazi Khan, went into liquidation, and on the 20th July 1916, the Liquidation Judge, Lala Damodar Das, passed an order under section 186 against various persons including Lala Tharya Ram of Dera Ghazi Khan, who was ordered to pay a sum of Rs. 1,409-3-11. The Official Liquidator, one Narain Das Sethi, Bar-at-Law, on the 30th day of July 1917, executed a deed of assignment in favour of Lala Sohan Lal and Popat Ram under which, amongst others, the debt due by Lala Tharya Ram was assigned to the said Sohan Lal and Popat Ram. On the 16th of October 1917, the said assignees applied in the Court of the District Judge at Dera Ghazi Khan for execution of the said order as against Lala Tharya Ram and sought to have the judgment-debtor arrested. On the 30th November 1917, the learned District Judge held that he had no jurisdiction in the matter inasmuch as the decree sought to be executed was not that of his Court. The assignees filed a petition for review of this order on the 3rd December 1917, in which they pointed out that the order passed by the Additional Judge amounted to a decree by virtue of section 199, Indian Companies Act, 1913, and that the assignees were entitled to proceed with the execution of the said decree having complied with the provisions of section 201 of the said Act. This petition of review was accepted by the learned District Judge on the 9th December 1917, and execution of the decree was ordered to proceed. Lala Tharya Ram thereupon preferred this appeal to this Court through Mr. Mukand Lal Puri, and Mr. Sangam Lal has been heard on behalf of the respondents.

On behalf of the appellant it was contended that sections 199, 200 and 201 of the Indian Companies Act, 1913, were not intended to, and did not, override the provisions of Order XXI, rule 16, Civil Procedure Code, and that, therefore, the Court of the District Judge at Dera Ghazi Khan had no jurisdiction in the matter of the execution of the decree passed under section 186 of the Companies Act, 1913.

Under Order XXI, rule 16, Civil Procedure Code, a decree may be executed on the application of the transferee of such decree—

(1) when the decree has been transferred by assignment in writing or by operation of law ;

(2) when the decree has been transferred by assignment and notice of the application has been given to both the transferor and the judgment-debtor ; and

(3) when the application for execution is made to the Court which passed the decree.

It seems clear, therefore, that under the ordinary procedure the transferee of a decree must apply to the Court passing the decree. That is apparent from the terms of rule 16, and if authority is needed, it is to be found in Tameshar Prasad v. Thakur Prasad

(1) as well as Amar Chundra Banerjee v. Guru Prosunro Mukerjee (2). The question remains whether there is anything in the Indian Companies Act, 1913, which ousts the ordinary rules of procedure as laid down by the Civil Procedure Code. Under section 199, Indian Companies Act, 1913, all orders made by a Court under the Act are enforceable in the same manner in which decrees of such Court made in any suit pending therein are enforceable. The order under consideration was passed under section 186 of the said Act and is, therefore, enforceable as a decree. Section 200, Indian Companies Act, 1913, enacts that any order made by a Court in the course of the winding up of a Company shall be enforced in any place in British India other than that in which such Court is situate by the Court that would have had jurisdiction in respect of such Company if the registered office of the Company had been situate at such other place and "in the same manner in all respects as if such order had been made by the Court that is hereby required to enforce the same." In other words, an order passed by a Court winding up a Company is enforceable by any other Court in British India which would have had jurisdiction to wind up the Company, in the same manner as if such other Court had passed the order itself.

Further section 201, Indian Companies Act, 1913, lays down that when any order passed by one Court is to be enforced by another, a certified copy of the order so made shall be produced to the proper officer of the Court that is required to enforce the same and that the production of such certified copy shall be sufficient evidence of such order having been made, and further that the Court before which such certified copy is produced shall take the requisite steps in the matter for enforcing the order "in the same manner as if it were the order of the Court enforcing the same".

Admittedly the Official Liquidator could have executed this order by complying with the provisions of section 201, and applying to the Court at Dera Ghazi Khan for its enforcement. Mr. Puri, however, contended that this special facility was not intended to apply in the case of a transferee from the Official Liquidator. On the other hand Mr. Sangam Lal contended that section 200, Indian Companies Act, 1913, entitled the transferee to apply to any Court in British India in spite of the provisions of Order XXI, rule 16. Neither side has produced any authorities in support of their contentions and as far as I have been able to ascertain, the matter is res integra.

Now section 199 of the Indian Companies, Act, 1913, enacts that any order passed by a Court under the said Act is enforceable in the same manner in which a decree passed by such Court would be.

It follows, therefore, that an order of payment made under section 186 of the Act has to be regarded as a decree and enforced as such.

This means that the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code relating to the execution of decrees are applicable.

Ordinarily, therefore, it would be necessary for a Liquidator to make an application

(2) 27 C. 488; 14 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 321.

THAKYA RAM v. POPAT RAM.

under Order XXI, rules 10 and 11 (2), Civil Procedure Code, and if it was desired to get the order enforced in a part of British India other than that in which the Court making it had jurisdiction, it would be necessary for the said Liquidator to have recourse to section 39 and Order XXI, rules 4, 5 and 6, etc., Civil Procedure Code. Here, however, section 201 of the Act steps in, removes the necessity for complying with the procedure laid down in section 39 and Order XXI, rules 4 and 5, dispenses with the requirements of rule 6 and empowers the other Court to act on a certified copy of the order alone.

Further, section 200 of the Act also varies the provisions of Order XXI, rules 4, 5, 7, etc., to this extent that it enacts that when it is necessary to obtain the assistance of another Court for the enforcement of such an order, such Court shall be the Court specified therein.

Here, however, the Indian Companies Act, 1913, stops and the other provisions of the Civil Procedure Code relating to the execution of decrees remain, and must be regarded as in force.

I think it must be conceded that as in the case of decrees so in the case of orders of payment under section 186 of the Indian Companies Act, 1913, the person to apply for the enforcement of an order or decree is the person in whose favour the order or decree has been made or passed.

An assignee or transferee cannot make such an application unless and until his name has been substituted for that of the person in whose favour the decree or order has been passed or made.

The Indian Companies Act, 1913, makes no provision for this being done in the case of orders passed under section 186 of the Act, and, therefore, recourse must be had to the procedure laid down in Order XXI, rule 16, of the Civil Procedure Code.

So long as the person seeking to enforce such an order is the person in whose favour it was made, it is not difficult to understand the reason why the more cumbersome procedure to be found in the Civil Procedure Code was dispensed with, the object being to provide for the recovery of a Company's debts expeditiously ly and with as little trouble and expense as possible.

When, however, the person applying for enforcement is a transferee from the Liquidator, the same reasons do not apply, and there appears to be no necessity or justification for a departure from the procedure laid down in rule 16, which provides certain safeguards for the benefit of the judgment-debtor and the decree-holder alike.

The use of the words "in the same manner in all respects as if such order had been made by the Court that is hereby required to enforce the same", in section 200 and "in the same manner as if it were the order of the Court enforcing the same," in section 201, presents no real difficulty inasmuch as a reference to section 42 of the Civil Procedure Code shows that a "Court executing a decree sent to it shall have the same powers in executing such decree as if it has been passed by itself," and as was held in Tameshar Prasad v. Thakur Prasad (1) and Amar Chundra Banerjee v. Guru Prosunno Mukerjee (2), section 42 is subject to the special provisions of Order XXI, rule 16, Civil Procedure Code, which require that an application by a transferee of a decree for execution after substitution of his name can be entertained only by the Court which passed the decree.

It seems to me that sections 200 and 201 of the Indian Companies Act, 1913, must also be held to be subject to the special provisions of rule 16 of Order XXI of the Civil Procedure Code and that, therefore, a transferee of an order under section 186 of the Indian Companies Act, 1913, must, in the first instance, apply to the Court which made the order.

I accordingly hold that the District Judge of Dera Ghazi Khan had no jurisdiction to entertain the present application and accept this appeal with costs.

Appeal accepted.

ORDER OF REFERENCE TO A FULL BENCH.

KRISHNAN, J.—The facts necessary for this reference may be briefly stated as follows: The 1st defendant, who is the appellant before us, brought a suit for money against defendants Nos. 2 to 4 and when that suit was pending, he obtained an order under rule 6, Order XXXVIII, of the Code of Civil Procedure for attachment before judgment and attached the plaintiff properties. The plaintiff intervened and claimed the properties as belonging to him by reason of a prior purchase from the same defendants. The claim was enquired into and an order was passed in March 1910 in plaintiff's favour disallowing the attachment. In 1912, 1st defendant obtained his decree for money against defendants Nos. 2 to 4 and he then proceeded again to attach the same properties. He had taken no steps to contest the order on the claim petition, nor has he done so up to date. Nevertheless when plaintiff again filed a claim against the second attachment his claim was dismissed and the attachment was confirmed. For some reason not apparent the Court failed to consider the effect of the first order. Plaintiff has filed this suit under rule 63 of Order XXI of the Code of Civil Procedure for a declaration of his title and for setting aside the order of attachment.

Both the lower Courts have decreed the plaintiff's suit without going into the merits, on the ground that the order on the first claim petition was conclusive between the parties because that order had decided in favour of plaintiff's title and against the first defendant's right to attach. In second appeal it is argued before us that as that order was passed on a claim to property attached before judgment, it is of no force now and that it is not an order to which rule 63 applies or which need be set aside.

The appellant's Vakil has relied on the ruling in Ramanamma v. Bathula Kamaraju (1), which certainly supports him. But on the order side our attention has been drawn to the decision in Second Appeal No. 601 of 1916, [Muthukumara Chettiar v. Alagappa Chettiar (2)], where my learned brother Mr. Justice Spencer and I were of opinion that rule 63 did apply to cases of attachment before judgment. As there is a clear conflict between the two decisions on the point before us and as I still adhere to the view expressed by us in the second appeal, I consider that the question should be referred to the Full Bench.

As our attention was not drawn to the ruling in the 5 Law Weekly [Ramanamma v. Bathula Kamaraju (1)] when we were hearing the Second Appeal No. 601 of 1916 [Muthukumara Chethiar v. Alagappa Chettiar (2)], we then stated our reasons for our view only very briefly. It is necessary now to state my reasons more fully, as with all respect to my learned brothers who decided the case in the Law Weekly [Ramanamma v. Bathula Kamaraju (1)], I am unable to accept their view that rule 63 is inapplicable in cases of attachment before judgment.

The decision on the point turns upon the construction of rule 63 of Order XXI and on the meaning to be attached to the word "investigated" in rule 8, Order XXXVIII. The wording of rule 63 is clearly wide enough to include claims before decrees, for the rule speaks of "claims and objections preferred" without restricting them in any way to claims after decree. The change in the wording of that rule from what it was in the corresponding section 283 of the old Code of 1882, by omission of all reference to sections 280 to 282, seems to indicate that it was intended to widen the scope of the rule and to make it clearer that claims of all kinds were included in it. This is the view taken in Bisheshar Das v. Ambika Pershad (3), and I agree with it in spite of the dissent from it in the 5 Law Weekly case [Ramanamma v. Bathula Kamaraju (1)]. As rule 63 is an enabling rule which gives a right of suit to parties defeated in claim proceedings which they will not otherwise have, I am inclined to think that we should not unduly restrict its scope. If the rule is held not to apply, the result seems to me to be that the original order becomes final without being subject to the result of a suit; I fail to see on what ground it can be treated as of no force, as argued. It is an order between parties by a competent Court deciding that a certain property can or cannot be attached for realising by sale the amount of the decree that may be passed and as such, it seems to me, it is binding on the parties thereto unless set aside. Considering that the two sets of orders, those before and those after decree, are passed after similar enquiries, no distinction should be made between them as to their effect unless the Legislature has clearly indicated a distinction.

Such a distinction is sought to be made out by reference to the word "investigated" in rule 8 of Order XXXVIII. It is argued that the word refers only to the enquiry on the claim and nothing more, in other words, only rules 58 and 59 of Order XXI apply. Now it will be seen that the heading of the Sub-Division of Order XXI where these rules are is "investigation of claims and objections", and under this heading we have grouped all the rules from 50 to 63. It is a reasonable inference from this that the Legislature treated them all as steps in "investigation" or parts of it. If we adopt a restricted meaning for the word "investigated," rules 60 to 62 will not be included in it, as they deal with orders to be passed after the "investigation" proper is completed; and as a result we will have to hold that the Legislature has not made any provision for orders to be passed in claims under that rule, as there is no other provision with regard to it except rule 8. Such a construction seems to me to be hardly right. If we consider that the order in the present case was passed under rule 60, Order XXI, read with rule 8 of Order XXXVIII, as I think we should, it follows that rule 63 applies to it as being an order under rule 60.

The restricted meaning is adopted in the 5 Law Weekly case [Ramanamma v. Bathula Kamaraju (1)], as the learned Judges considered that it would be unfair and inexpedient to drive a plaintiff into a fresh litigation which might eventually turn out to be a futile proceeding if he failed to secure a decree. It may be remarked that even in cases of attachments after decree, the suit under rule 63 may turn out to be futile if the first decree is reversed on appeal or second appeal and plaintiff's suit is dismissed, and yet the Legislature has clearly given the right of suit. I can see nothing unfair in making a person sue if he wishes to insist on his right to attach a certain property in execution of his anticipated decree in spite of the adverse order against him in the claim. If his second suit turns out to be futile because he fails to secure a decree, the fault is his own in bringing an unfounded suit in the first instance. It seems to me, however, these are not relevant considerations in deciding whether a suit lies under rule 63, nor can the wording of the Article 11 of the Limitation Act be used to decide the question. If that article does not apply, as to which I express no opinion, it will be necessary to find what article does when the question arises.

A similar question as the one before us which arose in an attachment before judgment when the Code (Act VIII of 1859) was in force was considered by Sir Barnes Peacock, C. J., and Mr. Justice Mitter; the learned Judges held on a construction of sections 26 and 246 of that Code, which were the corresponding provisions then in force, that the words "Investigated in the same manner as a claim to property attached in execution of a decree" incorporated all the provisions of section 246 and gave the remedy by suit, which was the only and proper remedy, to contest the order on the claim. This was decided in 1868 and till the decision in Ramanamma v. Bathula Kamaraju (1), no ruling has been cited to us to the contrary. I feel, therefore, fortified in my view that rule 63 does apply to claims before decrees as well. But on account of the conflict of authority in this Court the question must now be decided by the Full Bench.

I would submit the case for the opinion of the Full Bench on the following question:—

"Does rule 63 of Order XXI, Civil Procedure Code, apply to orders on claims preferred to property attached before judgment."

BAKEWELL, J.—I agree.

The second appeal came on for hearing before the Full Bench on the 15th July 1918.

Mr. C. V. Ananthakrishna Aiyar, for the Appellant.—Order XXI, rule 63, Civil Procedure Code, cannot apply to orders passed on claims to property attached before judgment. That order has no legal effect after the judgment was passed. The rule is intended to cover cases of claims preferred after decree. The word 'investigated' in Order XXXVIII, rule 8, refers only to the enquiry on the claim petition and rule 63 of Order XXI only covers cases of investigation under rule 58: Ramanamma v. Bathula Kamaraju (1).

Mr. P. Narayanmurthi, for the Respondent.—Rule 63 of Order XXI is an enabling rule and it should be liberally construed. Orders on claims to attached property passed before decree stand in the same position as orders passed after decree, and the Legislature did not intend to make any distinction between the two kinds of orders. The intention of the Legislature was to give a remedy to the party aggrieved by the order, and that remedy is provided for in rule 63. The order in the present case should be deemed to have been passed under Order XXI, rule 60, read with Order XXXVIII, rule 8, and, therefore, Order XXI, rule 63, clearly applies. Reference was made to Muthukumara Chettiar v. Alagappa Chettiar (2).

OPINION.—Section 86 of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1859, which was re-enacted without material alteration in section 487 of the Code of 1877 and in Order XXXVIII, rule 8 of the present Code, admittedly had the effect of applying to claims in respect of attachments before judgment all the provisions of section 246 of that Code, including the final provision enabling the party against whom the order was given to bring a suit to establish his right at any time within one year from the date of the order. By the Indian Limitation Act, IX of 1871, the provision as to limitation was taken out of section 246 and dealt with in Article 15 of that Act. In the Code of 1877, sections 278 to 283 were substituted for section 246 of the Code of 1859. In section 283, which corresponded to the last sentence of section 246, the language was altered, but there was nothing in the alteration from which an intention to make any of these provisions inapplicable to attachments before judgment could be inferred, nor is there anything of the sort in the changes made in the Code of 1908. The general policy of the law is that questions of title raised by claims against attachments before or after judgment should be promptly disposed of and as has been pointed out to us, this section was applied without question to a case of attachment before judgment which came before the Privy Council in Kissorimohun Roy v. Harsukh Das (4).

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII B. C. of 1855), s. 149—“Pleads”, meaning of—Suit by third person, whether rendered infructuous by plaintiff in rent suit obtaining decree—Landlord and tenant—Tenant proving registered kabuliyat—Landlord, whether can show that he never accepted kabuliyat.

The word “pleads” as used in section 149 of the Bengal Tenancy Act does not mean that the tenant should set up a valid plea or a plea that is open to him in accordance with law. Whether the plea is good, bad or indifferent, if the tenant hands in the amount claimed, the Court will serve notice on the third party and unless the third party brings his suit within three months, the plaintiff in the first suit will be entitled to the money. [p. 1004, col. 2.]

A suit instituted in accordance with clause (3) of section 149 of the Bengal Tenancy Act by the “third person” mentioned in that section is not rendered infructuous by the fact that owing to the Courts’ delay, before that suit is tried out, the plaintiff in the original rent suit gets a decree against the defendant. [p. 1004, col. 2.]

Where a kabuliyat executed and registered by a tenant is proved by the tenant in a suit, there is nothing in the Registration Act or the Evidence Act which prohibits the landlord from showing that he never assented to or accepted the kabuliyat. [p. 1005, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Sub-ordinate Judge, 1st Court, Pabna, in Pabna and Bogra, dated the 20th of September 1916, affirming that of the Munsif, 1st Court at Pabna, dated the 12th of August 1915.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Batu Scsadhur Roy (Junior), for the Respondent, raised a preliminary objection that the second appeal was not competent. Judgment was pronounced under section 149 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. It is an order and not a decree.

Babu Brojo Lall Chakraborty (with him Babu Gurudas Sinha), for the Appellant.—When the question of title is raised in the pleadings or arises out of the pleadings, a second appeal lies. Refers to Tirthabai Singh v. Purna Chandra Nag (1). If the order be in terms of section 149, Bengal Tenancy Act, then I may not have a right of appeal, but when in this case the plaintiff prays that his right and title to the money deposited in Court be declared, surely I have got a right of appeal.

As to the merits of the appeal the defendant is the appellant, and the appeal arises out of a suit brought under section 149 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Under the terms of section 149 the deposit of rent is allowed only under particular circumstances and the question is, whether the Court was competent under the circumstances of the case to accept the deposit. So far as the present appellant is concerned, the tenant is bound to pay him rent and there can be no bona fide doubt on his part as to whether the present appellant is his landlord and is entitled to recover the rent. Further, the point is res judicata, the appellant having in a previous suit obtained a decree for rent against the tenant. In the face of that decision, the tenant cannot plead that the rent is due not to the present appellant but to some other person.

My next point is that the Courts below have erred in deciding a question of title between the parties. In a suit under section 149, the Court is only competent to make an order restraining payment out of the money deposited in Court.

The third point is that the present appellant having obtained a rent decree against the tenant before the decision of the plaintiff’s suit under section 149, the plaintiff is not entitled to any relief.

(1) 14 Ind. Cas 230; 16 C. W. N. 558; 15 C. L. J. 501.

HEMANTA LUMAR KAR V. BIRENDRA NATH ROY.

Further, it appears that the defendant's father executed a registered kabuliyat in favour of the plaintiff's father. That kabuliyat has been proved in this case. Evidence has been allowed to be given to prove that that kabuliyat was never acted upon and that the plaintiff's father never assented to the terms of that document. The learned Judge was, having regard to the provisions of section 92 of the Evidence Act, wrong in admitting oral evidence in variation of the terms of the registered document.

Babu Sasadhar Roy (Junior), for the Respondent, submitted that the decision of the lower Appellate Court was concluded by findings of fact, and that the Courts below were right in holding that the plaintiff was entitled to the money deposited in Court. The wording of section 149 of the Bengal Tenancy Act shows that the order shall not only restrain one party from taking out the money in deposit but shall also allow the other party to withdraw the money, otherwise the provisions of the section would be rendered nugatory. Refers to clause (3) of section 149. The Courts below were quite right in declaring that the plaintiff had a right to the money. Refers to Rubi-un-nessa v. Gooljan Bibee (2). Further, the suit having been instituted within the time mentioned in section 149, it was maintainable.

Babu Brojo Lall Chakraborty, for the Appellant, replied.

JUDGMENT.

FLETCHER, J.—This is an appeal by the defendant against the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge of Pabna, dated the 20th September 1916, affirming the decision of the Munsif of the same place. It is stated that the suit is brought under the terms of section 149 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. That is not strictly accurate. The suit goes far beyond the terms of a suit authorised by section 149 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

The facts are these. The defendant sued a person alleged to be his tenant for rent. The tenant pleaded that the present defendant was not his landlord but a third party was and, in compliance with the terms of section 149 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, he paid into Court the amount claimed for rent. Thereupon the Court directed notice to be served on the third party, that is, the present plaintiffs. The objections to the suit are these: It is said, first of all, that, in a former rent suit, the present defendant had recorded judgment against the tenant for rent and that, therefore, it is a case of res judicata and it is said that the word 'pleads' as used in section 149 means that the tenant sets up a valid plea or plea that is open to him in accordance with the law. It does not mean anything of the sort. Plea means plea, pure and simple, whether good or bad. Whether it is good, bad or indifferent, if the tenant hands in the amount claimed, the Court serves notice on the third party and, unless the third party brings his suit within three months, the plaintiff in the first suit is entitled to the money. There is nothing in the point that the word 'plea' used in section 149 means a valid plea or plea according to the provisions of the law.

The second point is a point which, if I may say so, is worthy of less respect even than the first. The plaintiffs in the present case brought the suit within the period mentioned in section 149 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Owing to the state of business prevailing in the Civil Courts in this country, the Court was not immediately able to give its consideration to the plaintiffs' case. In the meantime, the present defendant had managed to go on with his rent suit and to get a decree against the tenant and, therefore, it is said that the Court was incompetent to consider the present suit of the plaintiffs. That is clearly not so. Obviously, the parties are not responsible, at any rate, they cannot be held responsible, for the state of the delay that exists in the Civil Courts in this country.

Another point that is raised is that, in a suit under section 149 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the question of title cannot be gone into. But the decisions of this Court show that suits have been admitted both founded on the provisions of section 149 of the Bengal Tenancy Act and also on the question of title. That being so, we must follow the established practice.

The last point on the merits is one that has less support than even the point of law that has been raised. The facts are these: The defendant's father wrote out and registered a kabuliyat relating to land belonging to the plaintiffs' father. The finding is that the plaintiffs' father never assented to all the terms of the kabuliyat. The learned Vakil for the defendant-appellant says that his client's father having written out the document relating to the plaintiffs' land and having registered it—although the facts prove that the plaintiffs' father never assented to it—under the terms of the Registration Act, the plaintiffs are precluded from giving oral evidence that their father did not assent to any document being executed by the defendant's father relating to the plaintiffs' land. It is quite clear that there is nothing in the Registration Act or the Indian Evidence Act prohibiting the plaintiffs from showing that the defendant's father was not authorised to deal with the land or that it was not accepted by the plaintiffs' father. In that view, the appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs.

SHAMSUL HUDA, J.—I agree.

SPINNING AND WEAVING MILLS

COY, LTD., SHAHDARA—

DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Companies Act (VII of 1913), s. 171—Suit against Company—Liquidation—Leave to continue suit, when to be granted.

Under section 171 of the Companies Act leave to continue a suit against a Company in liquidation should be given only where some question arises which cannot satisfactorily be determined in the winding up proceedings.

Application for sanction to be allowed to proceed with the case, pending in the Court of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Amritsar, against the respondent Company.

Mr. D. N. Mehra, for the Petitioners.

Mr. Dalip Singh, Official Liquidator, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Messrs. Jawahir Singh Sunder Singh of Amritsar instituted a case against the Lahore Spinning and Weaving Mills Company, Limited, for Rs. 7,820. During the pendency of this suit on the 26th January 1918, the said Company was put into liquidation by an order of this Court, and the said Jawahir Singh Sunder Singh have thereupon made this application under section 171 of the Indian Companies Act, 1913, asking for leave to proceed with the suit. Mr. Dalip Singh, the Official Liquidator of the said Company, has raised an objection to the granting of such leave and has urged that the matter is one which can satisfactorily be determined in the winding up. As a general rule in England leave to continue an action is given only where some question arises which cannot satisfactorily be determined in the winding up proceeding, vide, Wilson v. Natal Investment Co. (1), Life Association of England, In re (2) and Pool Firebrick and Blue Clay Co., In re (3). Mr. Dina Nath on behalf of the applicants has been unable to show me any reason why the same rule should not be applied in this country, nor has he been able to refer to any question which arises in this matter which cannot satisfactorily be determined in the winding up, and I accordingly follow the authorities cited above and refuse the application. In the circumstances, however, I direct that the applicants be admitted to prove for their debt and the costs they have incurred in the suit.

Application refused.

Act directing that the plaintiff landlord should be entitled to recover khas possession of the land if four

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Birbhum, dated the 14th of November 1916, affirming that of the Munsif, 2nd Court, Bolpur, dated the 18th of December 1915.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Khitish Chander Chakerbarty, for the Appellant.—The learned Judge in the lower Appellate Court has relied on Sitanath Midda v. Basudeb Midda (1).
That case is not good law. I invite your Lordships attention to *Malkarjun bin
Shidramappa Pasare v. Narhari bin Shivappa* (2). There an objection was taken that a certain wrong person was made a party to represent a defendant and on the basis of that, a sale took place.
The Court held that even if the Court was wrong, the decree was null and void and the only thing for the wronged party was to apply to the Court for amendment.

Then the case of Dayamoyi v. Ananda Mohan Roy (3) does not say anything about underraiyats, but the lower Court says that this case is also applicable to the case of under-raiyats.
Transferee of an under-raiyati holding has no right: Akhil Chandra Biswas v. Hasan Ali

(2) 5 C. W. N. 10 at pp. 15 and 16; 2 Bom. L. R. 927;

(3) 27 Ind. Cas. 61; 42 C. 172; 18 C. W. N. 971; 20
C. L. J. 52 (F. B.).

Sadagar (4) referred to. It has been held there that unless the under-raiyat has acquired occupancy right he cannot transfer.
In the present case the defendants having acquired no occupancy right their right was non-transferable. Even if Dayamoyi's case
(3) is applicable, there having been relinquishment and abandonment I am entitled to khas possession, and it has been found that during the pendency of the suit there has been abandonment within the meaning of section 87, Bengal Tenancy Act.

Babu Santosh Kumar Bose, for the Respondents.—The landlord, after having treated the holding all along as one and not split up, is now estopped from raising the point that the lands were split up. So far as splitting up is concerned, he has no case. So far as *Sitanath Midda v.
Basudeb Midda* (1) is concerned, that case does not stand alone in my favour. I beg to draw your Lordships' attention to a case reported as *Jogeshuri Chowdhraïn v.
Mahomed Ebrahim* (5). There it was held that such a decree which makes a condition precedent that non-payment of rent for four consecutive years will make the tenant liable to ejectment, is illegal. The decree being illegal and my client's vendor, being not a party to the suit in which the decree was passed, is not bound by the decree; hence the purchaser also is not liable, and this was also held in Sitanath Midda v. Basudeb Midda (1).
Hence the plaintiff cannot bring a suit against me for my ejectment for non-payment of the rent-decree in the suit of the plaintiff under section 66 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

Babu Khitish Chander Chakerbarty, in reply.—My friend's client may not be bound by the decree, but the plaintiff is not bound by the transfer of the tenancy.
I have not recognised him. As regards abandonment section 67 is not exhaustive and this has been held in Dayamoyi's case (3), and your Lordships have held the same view in Ramyad Sahu v. Bindeswari Kumar Upadhay (6). So far as the cases in Jogeshuri Chowdhraïn v. Mahomed Ebrahim
(5) and Ramyad Sahu v. Bindeswari Kumar

MUKTA KESHI DEBI v. GIRI BALA DEVI.

Upadhyay (5) cited by my learned friend are concerned, those were decided on the basis of the case in Sitanath Midda v. Basudeb Midda (1) and hence those were correctly decided as well.

JUDGMENT.

WALMSLEY, J.—The plaintiffs-appellants brought this suit to recover khas possession of a certain plot of land on declaration of their title thereto. Their case was that two brothers Jagabandhu and Nabin held the land under them as under-raiyats, each brother having a separate plot which he held apart from the other brother. Both brothers are dead and the defendants Nos. 4, 5 and 7 now represent the deceased Nabin. Sometime in 1913 the plaintiffs brought a suit purporting to be under section 66 of the Bengal Tenancy Act against the representatives of both the brothers and obtained a decree to the effect that if the decretal amount were not paid within fifteen days, the plaintiffs would be entitled to enter into possession of the land. The amount specified was not paid and the plaintiffs obtained symbolical possession. Then the defendant No. 1, the contesting defendant, appeared on the scene. She said that defendant No. 8 had obtained a decree against Nabin and put the decree into execution against Nabin's widow and daughters and in execution sold Nabin's share in the holding and bought it himself and that he had subsequently transferred it to her, i.e., the defendant No. 1. She made a claim under Order XXI, rule 100, Civil Procedure Code, for the purpose of recovering possession, but during the course of the investigation of her claim she made a statement to the effect that she was actually in possession; and the Court accordingly dismissed the claim. Then on 23rd January 1915 the plaintiffs brought the present suit. In answer to the plaintiffs the defendant No. 1 filed a long written statement, amongst other things, challenging the nature of the plaintiffs' interest in the land and their assertions regarding the defendant's interest. When the case came to Court it was agreed that two preliminary issues should be tried, the first of them relating to the decree obtained by the plaintiffs under section 66, and the Munsif proceeded to decide these two issues.

In the suit brought by the plaintiff against the brothers under section 66 they had asked for rent of four years, not for one year only, and an objection was taken on behalf of the defendant No. 1 that by asking for four years' rent they had disentitled themselves to the remedy granted by section 66. The Munsif upheld this contention, relying on the case of Sitanath Midda v. Basudeb Midda (1). He also found the other issues against the plaintiffs, but that followed as a necessary consequence on his finding on the first issue. The plaintiffs appealed to the District Judge and the learned District Judge upheld the decision of the first Court.

It is now contended before us that the Courts below are wrong in holding that the decree passed in the plaintiffs' suit under section 66 was bad. The authority I have just mentioned is quite clear on the point. It follows an earlier case reported as Jogeshuri Choudhrai v. Mahomed Ebrahim (5) and I do not myself entertain any doubt about the correctness of these decisions. It follows that the decree directing that the plaintiffs should be entitled to recover khas possession of the land if four years' rent was not paid was bad. Further the defendant No. 1 was not a party to those proceedings, although she was actually at that time in possession of the land. Now the case for the plaintiffs as set out in their plaint is clearly based upon that decree. The whole of the plaint makes it plain that they claimed to be put in possession of the land on the ground that the sum of money mentioned in the decree passed in that suit had not been paid to them by the defendants. It follows, therefore, I think, that on this ground alone the plaintiffs' suit was rightly dismissed. If the plaintiffs bring another suit to evict the defendant No. 1 as a trespasser, the other points which have been mentioned in this appeal will arise. We express no opinion regarding those points or regarding the views set out in the judgment of the learned Judges. For the reasons given I think that the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

PANTON, J.—I agree.

Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), ss. 158, 193—Suit to establish right to muafi, dismissal of—Appeal—Remand order of—Appeal, second, whether lies.

Plaintiff brought a suit in the Revenue Court for a declaration that he was the proprietor of a disputed muafi. The suit was dismissed but on appeal the District Judge declared that the plaintiff was a rent-free grantee of so much of the land in suit as he was occupancy tenant of, and remanded the suit to the lower Court for determination of the revenue payable by the plaintiff.

Held, that by virtue of section 193 (a) of the Agra Tenancy Act no second appeal lay against the order of the District Judge.

Second appeal from a decision of the District Judge, Cawnpore, modifying a decree of the Assistant Collector, First Class, Fatehpur.

Mr. Haribans Sahai, for Mr. Nawal Khishore, for the Appellant.

Mr. N. C. Vaish, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff in the Court of first instance is the respondent here. He brought a suit in the Revenue Court in which he prayed that he might be declared proprietor of a disputed muafi and that costs, etc., might be granted to him. The Court of first instance dismissed his claim altogether. He then went in appeal to the District Judge of Cawnpore, who ordered that the decree of the lower Court, that is to say, the Court of first instance, dated the 13th of March 1916, be set aside and the appeal be allowed to the extent that the plaintiff was entitled to be declared rent-free grantee of so much of the land in suit as he was then entered in the revenue papers as occupancy tenant of the same. The order, however, did not stop here. It went on as follows:—“That the suit be remanded to the lower Court for determination of the revenue payable by the plaintiff appellant.” The defendant has now come to this Court and asks that the decree of the lower Appellate Court be set aside and the decree of the Assistant Collector be restored or any other order, that may be deemed fit, may be passed. Various pleas were then set out attacking the judgment of the District Judge. Upon the appeal being called on in this Court for hearing, a preliminary objection was at once raised on behalf of the plaintiff-respondent, namely, that no second appeal lies from the order of the District Judge. In support of the contention stand was taken upon section 193 of the Agra Tenancy Act of 1901, and it was contended on the ground set out in clause (a) of section 193 that the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure did not apply to the procedure in suits and other proceedings under the Rent Act. Our attention was called to the case of Vilayat Husen v. Maharaja Mahendra Chandra Nandy (1) and Gulzari Lal v. Latif Husain (2). The learned Vakil for the appellant meets this objection by maintaining that he is not appealing from any order but from a decree, and so seeks to bring the case away from clause (a) of section 193. He dwelt a great deal upon the hardship that, if it was held otherwise, he would have no remedy. Be that as it may, we are here not to make law but to expound it as it stands, and it appears to us that the only meaning we can put upon clause (a) of section 193 of the Rent Act is that no appeal lies from an order of this kind. He contended that the decision of the District Judge of Cawnpore was in reality a preliminary decree. We have considered this, but we are unable to agree with it. The Tenancy Act says nothing from first to last about preliminary or final decrees. The result is that the objection prevails and the appeal is dismissed with costs. There is a cross objection but we have heard nothing about it from the beginning of the case up to this moment. It stands dismissed.

Appeal dismissed.

Abwab—Annual payment for upkeep of embankments, nature of—Long-continued payment from time immemorial, whether creates title in favour of recipient.

An annual sum claimed by the Government from Government khas mahal tenants in respect of certain embankments the upkeep of which is necessary for the preservation of the lands of the tenants, is not an abwab.

A long-continued payment beyond the memory of man of an annual sum is in itself a title in favour of the recipient of such sum. C UDAY NARAIN JANA v. SECRETARY OF STATE, 22 C. W. N. 823 Accounts, suit for—Death of agent—Legal representatives of agent, liability of—Procedure.

The death of an agent during the pendency of a suit against him for accounts does not exonerate his legal representatives from all liability to the principal. After the death of the agent the proper procedure in the suit would be that the statement of claim put in by the plaintiff should be investigated, preferably by a Commissioner in the presence of the representatives of the deceased agent. The onus would be on the plaintiff to prove each item in the sum which he claims, i. e., to prove that each item was actually realised by the agent and further that it was not paid to his credit. The representatives of the deceased agent would be at liberty to adduce such evidence as they please to show either that the money was not realised by the agent or that after realisation it was paid to the plaintiff. The amount actually due being thus ascertained, the Court would pass a decree against the assets of the deceased agent in the hands of the representatives.

—, whether can be adjudicated where no further relief can be granted.

Apart from any special statutory provision, accounts cannot be adjudicated upon by a Court when no further relief can be granted. Ordinarily a suit for accounts upon a mortgage cannot be maintained by the mortgagor unless he also asks for redemption.

An adjudication which cannot be the basis of any relief is not binding on the parties. N MUKAND RAM SUKUL v. SHEQ NARAIN debts, secured or unsecured, except debts secured by a first mortgage in English form.

In an English mortgage the ownership is wholly transferred to the creditor, which is, however, liable to be divested by the repayment of the loan on an appointed day. The mortgagee has the right to enter upon possession of the property immediately upon execution of the deed, unless the possession of the mortgagor is protected by a covenant for quiet enjoyment till default. The mortgagor has only the right to redeem. The mortgagee is not obliged to apply for sale of the property mortgaged under rule 18 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act. He has no debt proveable in the insolvency until his security has been valued or realised. He stands outside the bankruptcy.

The general rule is that unless a contrary intention is shown, a mortgage of land or buildings passes the right to the fixtures then upon the premises, and fixtures attached by the mortgagor to the property after the date of the mortgage will also, except under an agreement to the contrary, pass to the mortgagee.

The ownership of the property passes to the first mortgagee in an English mortgage but not to the puisne mortgagees.

The rule of law, that where the titles of the Crown and of the subject concur the title of the Crown shall be preferred, except so far as the Legislature has thought fit to interfere with it, appears to be one of universal application.

Adverse possession

Section 10 of the Limitation Act applies only where the person setting up adverse possession claims adversely to the beneficial owner. Where, however, a person has been performing the duties of a shebait of an idol and applying the trust funds to the proper purposes of the trust and claims the right to hold that office and to perform those duties, section 10 of the Limitation Act has no application and he can acquire that right as against the original shebait by adverse possession.

By Article 124 of the Limitation Act a suit for possession of an hereditary office is barred after 12 years from the time when the defendant takes possession adversely to the plaintiff. Articles 134 and 144 do not apply to such cases. PAT NATH PUNJABI v. RADHA BINODE NAIK, 4 P. L. W. 283; 3 P. L. J. 327; (1918) PAT. 247

Where possession can be either lawful or unlawful, in the absence of evidence, it must be assumed to be the former.

Plaintiffs and defendants were joint owners of an estate and were recorded in the revenue papers as such. It appeared, however, that the defendants alone had been in possession of the joint estate. In 1890 the revenue records were the subject of challenge, but the defendants took no steps to get them rectified, with the result that the plaintiffs continued to be recorded as owners of their joint share:

Although a landlord has an option to treat a person cultivating his land without his permission as a trespasser and to sue him for possession and damages in the Civil Court or to treat him as a tenant and to sue him for rent for the occupation of the same at a fair and equitable rate, he cannot exercise that choice with any effect after a hostile title has been acquired by the occupant by reason of his adverse possession for more than 12 years. The effect of the existence of adverse possession for such a period is to extinguish the remedy of the real owner and the proceedings, if any, taken by him in the Revenue Court to eject the occupant by notice, as if he were a tenant-at-will, are without jurisdiction. O SHEO GOBIND v. ———ss. 95, 177 (f), 202—Jurisdiction of Revenue Courts—Suit under s. 95 for declaration of nature of tenancy—Objection as to jurisdiction of Revenue Court—Appeal, whether lies to District Judge.

A defendant in a revenue suit cannot be allowed by formally raising an untenable plea of jurisdiction to take the case from the Revenue Court to the Civil Court.

Plaintiff was directed by a Civil Court, under section 202 of the Agra Tenancy Act, to bring a suit in the Revenue Court for determination of the nature of his tenancy. He thereupon brought a suit under section 95 of the Act which was heard by an Assistant Collector. The defendant objected that the Revenue Court had no jurisdiction to hear the suit, but the objection was overruled:

Held, that the suit, being one under section 95 of the Agra Tenancy Act and having been brought in compliance with an order of the Civil Court, could be heard only by a Revenue Court, and that no question of jurisdiction had, therefore, been decided by the Revenue Court, so that an appeal against the decision of the Revenue Court did not lie to the District Judge under section 177, clause (f) of the Agra Tenancy Act. A DEO NARAIN SINGH v. Plaintiff brought a suit in the Revenue Court for a declaration that he was the proprietor of a disputed muafi. The suit was dismissed but on appeal the District Judge declared that the plaintiff was a rent-free grantee of so much of the land in suit as he was occupancy tenant of, and remanded the suit to the lower Court for determination of the revenue payable by the plaintiff:

Held, that by virtue of section 193 (a) of the Agra Tenancy Act no second appeal lay against the order of the District Judge. A ANANFGIR v. SRINIVAS, 16 A. L. J. 711 1008

Where some of several defendants appeal from a decree without bringing their co-defendants before the Appellate Court as respondents, the Appellate Court has no jurisdiction to pass any decree against the co-defendants without adding them as parties to the appeal.

An appeal having been preferred by some of the defendants, the Appellate Court set aside the decree of the lower court as against them and made a new decree against a co-defendant who was not a respondent to the appeal. Thereupon the latter applied for the restoration and re-hearing of the appeal in his presence:

The pre-emptor and the vendee both appealed from a decree in a pre-emption suit. Before the appeals could be heard the vendee died, and his appeal was dismissed for default. The pre-emptor applied to bring the representative of the deceased vendee on the record. The application was granted, but before the notice could be served on the representative the pre-emptor's appeal was decreed ex parte. The vendee's representative thereupon made an application (a) for setting aside the ex parte decree in the pre-emptor's appeal and (b) for getting himself substituted on the record as appellant in his father's place:

Held, (1) that no notice having been served on the applicant, limitation for the application for re-hearing the appeal which had been decreed ex parte commenced from the date on which the applicant had knowledge of the decree:

(2) that as the deceased vendee could not make default, his representative had the usual period of six months for applying to be brought on to the record, the order of dismissal for default being inappropriate and inoperative as a bar. P DAULAT RAI v. JAGAT RAM, 96 P. R. 1918 962

The appellant, however, failed to furnish security for the costs of the guardian ad litem and the appeal was consequently dismissed as against the minor. Subsequently the appeal was transferred to the Subordinate Judge, who heard a Pleader instructed by a third person on behalf of the minor and decreed the appeal. Arbitration Act (IX of 1899), s. 19—

Stay of suit—Umpire, appointment of, certainty of bias in—Order directing stay for limited period, validity of—Mutual mistake on matter of fact not essential to contract, effect of.

An arbitration tribunal in which the ultimate decision rests with the nominee of a class to which one of the parties belongs cannot be said to be an impartial tribunal.

When a Court finds that an agreement of reference to arbitration provides for the appointment of an umpire who would most certainly tilt the scales against one party, the Court should retain its jurisdiction to try the suit and refuse any application for stay thereof.

An order for stay under section 19 of the Arbitration Act ought not to be restricted by a time limit.

Where an agreement of reference provided that in case of dispute the matter should be referred to the arbitration of two merchants who were members of the Karachi Indian Merchants Association and in case of disagreement between the arbitrators, to an umpire nominated by the said arbitrators or in case of their inability to do so by the Managing Committee of the Association, and it was proved at the trial that the Rules of the Association were so imperfectly drafted and the Association so loosely constituted that the establishment of a valid tribunal of arbitrators was a matter of considerable difficulty:

Held, per Pratt, J. C.—That under such circumstances the Court would hesitate to enforce the arbitration.

Per Fawcett, A. J. C.—That both the parties appeared to be under a mistake of fact as to the validity of the constitution of the Association but as the matter was not one essential to the agreement, the agreement of reference was not void under section 20 of the Contract Act and hence could not be avoided on this ground.

The Court should exercise its discretion, in refusing to stay a suit or granting leave to revoke a submission, in a sparing and cautious manner and should not do so, unless the applicant can establish that there is good ground for apprehending that there will be a failure of justice if the reference to arbitration is allowed to proceed. S GOVERDHANDAS VISHINDAS RATANCHAND v. The mere fact that a man has built a house and put his son's name on a tablet in it does not signify that the house belongs to the son.

Landlord and tenant—Presumption of fixity of rent—Instrument stating rent to be variable, whether rebuts presumption—Purchaser of non-transferable holding, recognised, rights of—Sub-division or amalgamation of raiyati holding—"Hajat," meaning of.

Although the purchaser of a non-transferable occupancy holding cannot claim recognition by the landlord as a matter of right, yet when he obtains recognition from the landlord, whether by payment or otherwise, then in the absence of special circumstances he is admitted into the original tenancy with all its incidents and becomes the successor-in-interest of his vendor.

"Hajat" is a well-known expression for a sum which though, described as rent but never having been part of the rent, is held in terrorem over the raiyat and is recorded as held in suspense for the time being.

Per Richardson, J.—The language of clause (1) of section 50 of the Bengal Tenancy Act is elliptical and the words which must be supplied after "have held at a rent or rate of rent" are "a tenure or holding or land constituting a tenure or holding."

Both the principal rule enacted in clause (1) and the subsidiary, but in practice extremely important, presumption created by clause (2) of section 50 of the Bengal Tenancy Act assume the continuity and identity of the tenure or holding throughout the whole period from the Permanent Settlement onwards. They are applicable to land which at the time when the question arises may form part only of the raiyat's holding. Thus they apply to the several parcels of land of which the holding of a raiyat consists when the question arises. Part of the holding may be inherited land. Part may have been acquired by purchase from another raiyat. In either case the raiyat may tack on his own occupation of the land at an unvaried rent to the occupation at an unvaried rent of his predecessor-in-interest, who as regards lands acquired by purchase from another raiyat will include his vendor and his vendor's predecessors.

Section 50 is not affected by the variability of the rent at the inception of a tenancy. If the rent of a tenancy created prior to the Permanent Settlement, under an agreement which provided that the rent should be variable, has not in fact been "changed from the time of the Permanent Settlement", then it "shall not be liable to be increased". If an instrument is executed forty or fifty years later, the mere fact that the rent is expressed to be variable will by itself make no difference, as the provision for variability of rent may be merely a repetition of one of the original incidents of the holding. The true question in such cases would be whether the instrument created a new tenancy or whether it was merely confirmatory of a pre-existing interest or tenancy. C ABHOY SANKAR MOZUMDAR v. In a suit for the ejectment of the purchasers of an occupancy holding, the defendants pleaded that the suit was bad as it was instituted by the naib of the plaintiff without her knowledge:

Held, that as the plaintiff was a lady, the onus was upon the defendants to prove affirmatively that the plaintiff was ignorant of the suit and that it was not enough for them to point to a few facts which gave cause to suspect that it was the naib who instituted the suit and then to call upon the plaintiff to prove that she had authorised the institution of the suit. C GIRIBALA DAS v. The plaintiff sued to recover possession of those lands by ejecting the defendant on the allegation that the defendant's interest was an incumbrance within the meaning of section 161 of the Bengal Tenancy Act:

Held, (1) that the defendant's interest could not be deemed to be an incumbrance unless it was shown that the zemindar was in possession of those lands at the time when the patni was granted;

(2) that having regard to the provisions of section 103B of the Bengal Tenancy Act and the pleadings of the plaintiff and to the facts that there was no evidence to show that any rent had ever been realised in respect of those lands and that the defendant and his predecessor-in-title had been in possession for a long period without payment of rent, it was incumbent upon the plaintiff to show that the zemindar was in possession of the lands in dispute at the date of the creation of the patni and that the incumbrance of the defendant came into existence after that date. C BIPRODAS PAL CHOWDHURY v. Specific Relief Act, the reliefs claimed by the plaintiffs were inter alia the following:—

(ka) That the plaintiffs may be declared as occupancy raiyats.

(kha) That the land of schedule cha below may be declared as included in the right which the plaintiffs may be held to have.

(ga) That proper rents may be fixed of the lands in the possession of the plaintiffs and time for payment of the said rent may be fixed.

(gha) That the tenants under the plaintiffs may be held to have no rights as settled raiyats or occupancy raiyats.

(una) That the tenants under the plaintiffs may be declared to be korfa tenants (under-tenants):

Held, that so far as relief (ga) was concerned, the suit was one under section 104H of the Bengal Tenancy Act and was governed by the special law of limitation provided by that section, but that the claim for other reliefs was outside the scope of that section, and to that extent the suit was one under section 42 of the Specific Relief Act, as provided by the proviso to section 111A of the Bengal Tenancy Act, to which the limitation applicable was that provided by Article 120 of Schedule I of the Limitation Act. C RAJANI KANTA MOOKERJEE v. The tenant defendants, who preferred an appeal to the High Court having failed to pay the costs of the Deputy Registrar who was appointed guardian of the minor son, the appeal as against him was dismissed at the risk of the appellants:

An application made under section 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act for assessment of fair rent but subsequently withdrawn should be treated as if it had never been made, so that it cannot bar a suit in the Civil Court for the same purpose under section 109 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

Where a suit brought under the provisions of section 106 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, for a declaration that an entry in the Record of Rights that no rent was paid in respect of a tenure was wrong and that in fact a certain sum was payable as rent, is dismissed for non-joinder of parties, section 109 of the Act is no bar to a subsequent suit in a Civil Court for assessment of fair rent upon the tenure.

s. 106—Record of Rights, entry in, correction of—Plaintiff and defendant recorded as joint landlords—Partition—Burden of proof.

In a proceeding under section 106 of the Bengal Tenancy Act for the correction of an entry in the Record of Rights, in which the names of the plaintiff and his co-sharer defendant No. 7 were entered as joint landlords, it was found that there had been a partition between them long before the Record of Rights and that the plaintiff had been in sole possession since the partition:

Held, that although there was nothing to show what was the precise result of the partition, still in the absence of any evidence on the part of defendant No. 7 to show that the plaintiff's possession was as a co-sharer on his behalf, the plaintiff should be recorded as the sole landlord. C BROJENDRA KISHORE ROY v. s. 149—"Pleads", meaning of—Suit by third person, whether rendered infructuous by plaintiff in rent suit obtaining decree.

The word "pleads" as used in section 149 of the Bengal Tenancy Act does not mean that the tenant should set up a valid plea or a plea that is open to him in accordance with law. Whether the plea is good, bad or indifferent, if the tenant hands in the amount claimed, the Court will serve notice on the third party and unless the third party brings his suit within three months, the plaintiff in the first suit will be entitled to the money.

A suit instituted in accordance with clause (3) of section 149 of the Bengal Tenancy Act by the "third person" mentioned in that section is not rendered infructuous by the fact that owing to the Courts' delay, before that suit is tried out, the plaintiff in the original rent suit gets a decree against the defendant. C HEMANTA KUMARKAR v. s. 153 (b)—Rent suit, dismissal of, on ground that relationship of landlord and tenant not established—Appeal, whether lies.

In a suit for rent in which the amount claimed did not exceed Rs. 50, the plaintiff alleged that the defendant held two jamas under him, one at Rs. 3-12-0 and the other at Rs. 3-15-0 and he claimed to recover arrears of the jama of Rs. 3-15-0. The defendant admitted holding only one jama at Rs. 3-12-0 under the plaintiff, but denied holding any jama at Rs. 3-15-0. The Munsif, who had final powers under section 153 (b) of the Bengal Tenancy Act, holding that the jama claimed by the plaintiff was identical with that alleged by the defendant, dismissed the suit on the ground that there was no relationship of landlord and tenant between the parties in regard to the jama of Rs. 3-15-0 alleged by the plaintiff:

Held, that no appeal lay to the District Judge as the decision of the Munsif was not a decision of the question of the amount of rent annually payable, but was a decision as to the existence of the relationship of landlord and tenant between the parties in respect of the jama sued for. C MUKUNDA LAL ROY v. The interest of a mortgagee of a part of a holding who has purchased the holding in execution of his mortgage decree is an incumbrance within the meaning of section 161 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Such a mortgagee-purchaser cannot be ejected by the purchaser of the holding in execution of a rent decree until his incumbrance is annulled under the provisions of section 167 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. C INDRA NARAIN RAY v. Where in execution of a decree obtained in a suit for the rent of a tenure which has long before the suit been divided into separate taluks, the tenure is sold, the sale is not one under the Bengal Tenancy Act. To have the benefits of a sale for arrears of rent under the Bengal Tenancy Act there should be a separate suit in respect of each of the separate taluks.

The destruction of valuable incumbrances is a very severe measure, which the law allows only if a certain procedure is strictly followed, and when a party wishes to enforce that severe measure he must show that he has strictly followed the procedure laid down and there must be good proof of his strict compliance with the procedure. C PRAFULLA NATH TAGORE v. Bombay District Municipalities Act (III of 1901), s. 96—Application for permission to build privy—Permission granted—Subsequent order cancelling permission, legality of.

Plaintiff applied to the defendant Municipality on the 1st December 1913 for permission to build a privy on his own land, and the permission was granted by the Municipality on the 22nd of December. On the 8th of January 1914 the Municipality gave a notice to the plaintiff requiring him not to build the privy until a further order was made. The plaintiff thereupon brought a suit for a declaration that he had a right to construct the privy and also prayed for a perpetual injunction restraining the Municipality from preventing him from constructing the privy.

Held, that the order of the Municipality dated 22nd December 1913, granting permission to the plaintiff to build the privy, was a final order under subsection (2) of section 96 of the Bombay District Municipalities Act, and that the subsequent order of the Municipality was not justified under any section of the Act and was, therefore, illegal. B VITHAL DHONDDEV RAIKAR v. Bombay Land Revenue Code (Act V of 1879), ss. 3 (20), 217—"Alienated village," what is—Village in which the entire property in the soil has been granted, whether alienated.

In the definition of the word "alienated" in section 3 (20) of the Bombay Land Revenue Code the words "transferred in so far as the rights of Government to payment of the rent or land revenue are concerned," prescribe a certain minimum requirement, and where that minimum requirement is satisfied, the definition also is satisfied, notwithstanding that the transfer may cover certain other interests over and above those contained in the minimum requirement.

Where the Government has transferred to the grantee of a village not merely its own rights to receive the land revenue but the entire property in the soil, the village is an "alienated" one within the meaning of section 3 (20) of the Bombay Land Revenue Code and section 217 of the Code is applicable to it. B DADOO BHABOO v. Canon Law—Roman Catholic Church, constitution of and law applicable to—Church adopting rules different from those of parent body, effect of.

The Church of England is an established church and is, therefore, subject to the ordinary Courts of Law not only as to matters temporal but even as to matters of doctrine.

The Roman Catholic Church is not an established church but a voluntary association, and any member who joins that church will be bound by any rules which it has framed for its internal discipline and for the management of its affairs.

If a branch voluntary association adopts rules which differ materially from those of the parent body, then the members of that association will not be members of the parent body but will be an independent organisation with their own rules.

The Canon Law recognises no distinction between the spiritual and temporal powers of the Papacy, and the Episcopate and a member of any church which is part and parcel of the Universal Catholic Church would be bound by the Canon Law.

If a church, while adopting in the main the doctrines of the Roman Catholic Church, has yet erected certain rules different from the rules of the Catholic Church in matters of discipline and management, those rules must be proved in the same way in which a custom would have to be proved in a Court of Law.

Where an appointment as manager of a Vicar in a Roman Catholic Parish Church by the Bishop was questioned on the ground that he was not appointed by the junta composed of the heads of houses in a village as was the custom and that the delegation of any authority by the Bishop was only permissive:

Held, (1) that whether the church be viewed as a branch of the Roman Catholic Church or as a voluntary association the appointment was valid;

(2) that the question whether the custom was for the junta to appoint was one of fact on which the finding of the lower Appellate Court could not be interfered with in second appeal. M LOVES v. GONSALVES, 5 L. W. 208; 35 M. L. J. 407; (1918) M. W. M. 842 941

Carriage by sea—Short delivery, damages for—Freight illegally collected, suit for return of—General average contribution, claim for—Jurisdiction—Peril to crew and cargo—Jettison—Principles governing general average.

A claim for general average contribution can be sustained only when the voyage has been completed and the vessel has reached its place of destination or some other port safely. If there are several general average acts during the same voyage the principle is to make each owner of a sacrificed interest contribute to all the sacrifices in whatever order of time they may have occurred. The time of jettisoning cannot be taken as the time when the value of the goods is to be ascertained because the whole adventure may afterwards be brought to an end by the total loss of the ship and cargo when there can be no contribution at all.

A claim for general average may be laid at the place where the voyage has safely ended.

Plaintiff chartered 1st defendant's vessel to sail from Cutch to Basra; where it was to take 700 bundles of dates and discharge them at Calicut. First defendant was a resident of Cutch where the charter party was entered into. The ship experienced rough weather on her way from Basra to Calicut, in consequence whereof the master 2nd (defendant) had to jettison 165 bundles. The ship, however, reached Calicut in safety. The master refused to deliver to plaintiff any of the goods till the whole freight was paid. Plaintiff paid the freight under protest and sued the owner of the ship and the master in the Calicut Munsif's Court for (1) the return of the excess freight collected, and (2) the price of the bundles short-delivered, or (3) the amount due on a general average contribution. The defendants objected to the jurisdiction of the Court:

Held, (1) that the claim for return of freight was properly laid in the Calicut Court as the freight was collected at Calicut;

(2) that, as Calicut was the place of performance of the contract, the Calicut Court had jurisdiction to entertain the claim for the price of the short-delivered goods;

(3) that as the voyage safely came to an end at Calicut, plaintiff's cause of action for general average arose in Calicut. M RAJABHAI NARAIN OF CUTCH v. KARIM MAHOMED OF BOMBAY, 35 M. L. J. 189; (1918) M. W. N. 521; 24 M. L. T. 209

There is no authority for the proposition that all land within the limits of a Municipal town must, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, be taken to belong to the Municipal Committee.

A claim of title by adverse possession raises a mixed question of law and fact and should, therefore, be raised in the Court of the first instance so that the opposite party may plead to the claim and evidence may be adduced thereon.

C. P. Tenancy Act (XI of 1898), ss. 35, 36, 46—Surrender of occupancy holding for consideration—Heir of tenant placed in possession—Failure of consideration—Landlord, whether can recover money paid by him—Provision restraining heir from making claim, validity of.

Section 36 of the C. P. Tenancy Act is only exhaustive as to what the claimant is liable to pay and does not deal with any remedy the landlord may have against the tenant who surrenders his holding for valuable consideration, and certainly does not say that he has no remedy.

When an occupancy tenant surrenders his holding for consideration under section 35 of the C. P. Tenancy Act and his nearest heir is put in possession of the holding by a Revenue Officer acting under section 36 (1) of the Act, the landlord can recover from the surrendering tenant the consideration he has paid less the amount he has received under sub-section (1) of section 36.

A surrender of an occupancy holding for a consideration is not a transfer in contravention of the provisions of section 46 of the C. P. Tenancy Act.

A deed of surrender of an occupancy holding provided that if any one set up a claim to the fields surrendered, the tenants would be responsible for costs incurred by the landlord in defending the fields against such claims. The surrender was set aside at the instance of the heirs of the tenants:

Held, that the heirs were legally entitled to make the claim, and the agreement to prevent them making a claim was of such nature that, if permitted, it would defeat the provisions of the C. P. Tenancy Act and was, therefore, unlawful under section 23 of the Contract Act and that the landlord could not, therefore, recover the costs incurred by him in the revenue proceedings in defending the surrender against the heirs. N JAIRAM v. R. died leaving a Will, by which he bequeathed all his property to his mother A., on whose death R.'s widow brought a suit for possession of the holding on the ground that her husband had no right to will away the holding and that notwithstanding the bequest she remained the ordinary tenant of the holding:

Held, (1) that R. had no right to will away the tenant right;

(2) that section 94 of the C. P. Tenancy Act was not applicable to the case as the ouster, if any, of the plaintiff from the holding was not at the instance of the landlord;

(3) that there had been no implied surrender under section 35 (4) of the C. P. Tenancy Act, inasmuch as the payment of rent in advance must be taken to have been on behalf of the true tenant. N SHAMRAO v. SATYA BHAWU BAI 28

Plaintiff brought a suit claiming possession of a half share in each of two groves Nos. 2 and 123, situate in different villages. His suit was dismissed in respect of grove No. 2 and decreed in respect of grove No. 123. There were appeals both by the defendant and by the plaintiff. The latter's appeal was dismissed and the defendant's was allowed, the case being remanded. The plaintiff appealed to the High Court against the order of remand:

Held, that the failure of the plaintiff to appeal against the order, dismissing his own appeal to the lower Appellate Court, did not debar him from appealing against the order remanding the suit in the defendant's appeal.

Plaintiff brought a suit against the defendants to recover his share of the price of two trees cut down by the defendants, on the ground that he was entitled to a moiety share in the grove. The suit was one of the nature cognizable by a Court of Small Causes, but was instituted in the Court of the Munsif, who tried it as a regular suit and decided that the plaintiff was entitled to a half share in the grove. In a subsequent suit by the plaintiff to recover possession of his half share in the grove:

Held, that under Explanation II to section 11 of the Civil Procedure Code, the question of the plaintiff's title to a half share in the grove was res judicata.

Plaintiff brought a suit against defendant for recovery of money on the basis of a promissory note. The suit was dismissed and the pro-note was found to be not genuine. Defendant then prosecuted plaintiff for forgery but the plaintiff was acquitted. He thereupon brought a suit for damages for malicious prosecution:

Held, that the finding as to the genuineness of the pro-note in the previous suit was not res judicata in the suit for malicious prosecution, inasmuch as the plaintiff was not litigating under the same title in both the suits. PAT TEJU BHAGAT v. DEOKI NANDAN PROSAD 141

— s. 11—Res judicata, plea of, whether can be taken in appeal—Question left undecided by Appellate Court but decided by trial Court, whether res judicata.

The plea of res judicata is a question of law and can be raised at any stage of a suit.

An Appellate Court's judgment takes the place of and supersedes the decision of the trial Court, so that the principle of res judicata cannot apply where a question is left open and undecided by an Appellate Court, although it was decided by the trial Court. PAT GOBIND MISSEER v. A judgment in a suit for rent deciding the question of the annual jama, even where it does not operate as res judicata on the same question in a subsequent suit for rent, is good evidence as to the rate of rent.

Semble.—The tendency of the more recent decisions of the Calcutta High Court is that when the question of the annual jama has been raised in a suit for rent and decided, it will be regarded as res judicata in later suits for rent of the same holding. C HAR KUMAR SEN v. In such cases the test is whether the claim as laid by the objector is adverse to the claims of the real judgment-debtor, and an objector claiming under a paramount title is not deprived of his ordinary remedy of a regular suit merely because his objection is dismissed on the ground that he is held to be a party to the suit. N GANDELAL v. Held, (1) that the suit was properly brought under section 92 of the Civil Procedure Code;

(2) that the new mahant elect was not a necessary party to the suit;

(3) that it was not necessary to stamp the plaint with a Court-fee stamp calculated ad valorem on the value of the trust property, inasmuch as the plaintiffs were seeking nothing for themselves but merely the removal of the defendant from the office of mahant, which would involve his ejection from the immoveable property of which he was in possession as mahant. P GOPI DAS v. The Civil Procedure Code does not give a District Judge any power to interfere with the management of a religious trust unless and until a regular suit is filed in his Court, when it is open to him to exercise all the powers which the Code gives him in order to protect the property. He has no power to interfere and to suspend a trustee from his post on the application of a private person who has called attention to the fact that a breach of trust appears to have been committed. The Civil Procedure Code lays down a regular procedure for suits in such cases and until the Court is moved in that way, it has no power of supervision to interfere and to pass orders.

Clause (f) of section 104, Civil Procedure Code, refers to cases where a matter has been referred to arbitration without the intervention of the Court.

There is an inherent difference between orders refusing to file an award on a matter referred to arbitration without the intervention of the Court and those referred to under paragraph 1 of the Second Schedule of the Civil Procedure Code. In the former case, if the Court refuses to file an award, its order amounts to a formal adjudication on the matter in controversy and conclusively determines the rights of the parties. In the case of orders setting aside an award under paragraph 15 of the Second Schedule, the order is only of an interlocutory nature and is in no way a conclusive adjudication of the matter in dispute.

A dispute between members of a firm was privately referred by them to arbitration. An award being given, an application was made for filing it. Objections were raised and an issue as to the misconduct of the arbitrators was framed. Meanwhile the parties agreed to refer the whole matter in dispute to a new arbitrator and made an application to the Court to that effect. The new arbitrator was then appointed and gave his award. Objections were made to this second award and the Court, finding that one of the parties had not signed the application of reference to the arbitrator and that the first award had not been superseded, set aside the second award. An appeal to the District Judge was dismissed as incompetent and a second appeal was filed in the Chief Court:

Held, (1) that inasmuch as the application for the filing of the first award was numbered and registered as a suit between the parties, a suit was pending at the time the second reference was made and the order of the first Court was not, therefore, an order referred to in section 104, Civil Procedure Code;

(2) that the order in question setting aside the award did not amount to a decree and was not appealable as such;

(3) that the order of the lower Appellate Court disposed of a question of law and, even if wrong, was not open to revision as no material irregularity had been committed. P BEHARI LAL v. KHAN CHAND, 154 P. W. R. 1918

Plaintiff mortgagee brought a suit on his mortgage and obtained a decree. From the judgment it appeared that the Court intended that the property should be sold for the amount of the plaintiff's mortgage, interest and costs but finding that the plaintiff had made a sub-mortgage, it directed that the sub-mortgagee should get the amount of her mortgage out of the proceeds of the sale before the plaintiff was paid. But the decree as drawn up directed the property to be sold not only for the amount of the plaintiff's mortgage, but also for the amount of the sub-mortgage, that is to say, that the defendant was made liable not only for the mortgage which he had created but also for the sub-mortgage which the mortgagee had created. The defendant, therefore, applied for amendment of the decree in order to bring it into accordance with the judgment, but the Court dismissed the application:

Held, that the decree as drawn up was quite incorrect and unjust and that the refusal of the Court to amend the decree amounted to a refusal to exercise jurisdiction vested in the Court, and that the High Court was, therefore, entitled to interfere in revision. A PULE BISHUNATH RAI v. S. 115—Receiver, leave to sue, application for—Procedure—Revision.

The general principle applying to cases in which application is made to sue a Receiver in respect of properties in charge of the Court is that unless the Court is satisfied that there is no question at all to try or there is no legal foundation to the claim, leave should not as a matter of course be refused.

A petitioner in an application to sue a Receiver is entitled to an enquiry upon the materials furnished by the parties and if he so desires, to ask the Court to take evidence if the Court is not inclined to give leave as a matter of course. If the Court refuses to take evidence and proceeds to dispose of the application summarily, it acts with material irregularity in the exercise of its jurisdiction, and the High Court is, therefore, entitled to interfere in such a case under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code.

An application for leave to sue a Receiver is a case within the meaning of section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code.

There is no statutory provision which requires a party to take the leave of the Court to sue a Receiver. The rule is based on public policy and the grant of leave is made not in exercise of any power conferred by Statute but in exercise of the inherent power, which every Court possesses to prevent acts which constitute or are akin to an abuse of its authority. PAT BRAJA BHUSAN TRIGUNAIT v. The petitioner purchased a holding in execution of a money-decree obtained against the tenant by a third party. The landlord refused to recognise the petitioner as a tenant on the ground that the holding was non-transferable. Thereafter the landlord brought a suit for rent against the old tenant and obtained a decree ex parte in execution of which he sought to have the property sold, whereupon the petitioner preferred an objection contending that the landlord's decree was merely a money-decree inasmuch as it was obtained against the old tenant who had no interest in the tenancy. The Court, holding that the objection of the petitioner was preferred under the provisions of Order XXI, rule 58, Civil Procedure Code, overruled it as being barred under section 170 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The petitioner moved the High Court in revision under section 115, Civil Procedure Code:

Held, that as the petitioner had other remedies by suit or otherwise and that as the error of the execut-

An order refusing to set aside an execution sale under Order XXI, rule 90, Civil Procedure Code was reversed on appeal. The auction-purchaser was not a party to the proceedings. The judgment-debtor applied for restitution of the property from the auction-purchaser:

Held, (1) that section 144 of the Civil Procedure Code did not apply, inasmuch as no decree had been varied or reversed on appeal but only an order under Order XXI, rule 90, refusing to set aside a sale in execution;

(2) that an order could not be made under section 151 of the Civil Procedure Code on the analogy of section 144, inasmuch as the auction-purchaser was

During the pendency of a pre-emption suit the plaintiff lost his title to the property which qualified him for the exercise of the right of pre-emption, by virtue of a decree passed against him in another suit, and he filed an appeal from that decree. The Court trying the pre-emption suit thereupon dismissed it as not maintainable, but remarked in its judgment that if the plaintiff's appeal in the other suit was accepted, he might apply for revival of the pre-emption suit. The plaintiff won his appeal and within three years he applied under section 151, Civil Procedure Code, to the Court, which had decided the pre-emption suit, for its revival. The Court allowed the application:

Held, (1) that the Court had inherent power under section 151, Civil Procedure Code, to revive the suit;

(2) that the original order passed by the Court in the pre-emption suit was not the proper order to be passed in the circumstances, and that the proper course for the Court would have been to stay the proceedings until the pre-emptor had an opportunity of getting the decision of the Appellate Court on the question of title under which he was claiming pre-emption;

Where under a mortgage-deed both principal and interest become due, the mortgagee must sue for both together, otherwise he is debarred under Order II, rule 2, of the Civil Procedure Code, from claiming in a subsequent suit what was not claimed in the prior suit.

In a mortgage-deed executed by the defendant in favour of the plaintiff in 1909, interest was fixed nominally at Rs. 6 per mensem and a reference was made to an agreement between the parties to draw up a deed of lease of the mortgaged property. The lease was drawn up on the same day and provided that the mortgagor should pay rent at Rs. 6 per mensem. Plaintiff sued for the rent due to him in 1911 and obtained a decree. Subsequently he brought a suit for the recovery of the principal and interest due after 1911:

Held, that the mortgage and lease constituted one transaction and that the subsequent suit was barred by Order II, rule 2 of the Civil Procedure Code. P NATHA SINGH v. CHUNI LAL, 69 P. R. 1918; 112 P. W. R. 1918 364

— O. II, r. 2—Relinquishment of claim, what amounts to.

Order II, rule 2, Civil Procedure Code, refers to a case where there has been a suit in which there has been an omission to sue in respect of a portion of a claim, and a decree has been made in that suit. In such a case a second suit in respect of the portion so omitted is barred. But the rule does not apply to the amendment of a plaint by the addition of a claim which has been omitted in the plaint as originally filed.

Where a person knowing of the facts before the institution of a suit omits to make a particular claim by an oversight and the suit is carried to a decision without any amendment, Order II, rule 2, Code of Civil Procedure, prevents him from suing subsequently in respect of the claim so omitted, and it is no answer on his part to say that such omission was due to a mere mistake and was not actuated by any fraudulent or dishonest motive. But these principles do not apply where he makes an application for amendment before decree for the purpose of including the claim which was omitted through oversight. C UPENDRA NARAIN ROY v. Where a mortgagor brings a suit for redemption against some of the co-owners of the equity of redemption and obtains a decree, a subsequent suit on the mortgage against the other co-owners is barred under Order II, rule 2 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

Plaintiff sued the karnavan of a tarwad in his personal capacity for redemption of a kanom and obtained a decree. He then had knowledge of the tarwad's interest in the kanom. Subsequently he brought another suit for redemption against all the members of the tarwad:

— O. VI, r. 17—Amendment of plaint, when to be allowed.

On an application for amendment of a plaint the trial Court, without deciding anything, made the order for amendment subject to any contentions which the defendants might raise in answer to the claim as amended:

Held, that it would have been better and more regular if the question of the right to amend had been determined before the order was made or, if this would have involved a lengthy enquiry covering the same ground as the evidence in the suit, if the hearing of the application to amend had been adjourned to the hearing of the suit and determined on the evidence then taken.

The Court being desirous of getting at the true facts will allow an amendment subject to three general conditions; (a) Bona fides on the part of the applicant; (b) possibility of amendment without such prejudice to the other party as cannot be compensated by costs; (c) where the amendment is not such as to turn a suit of one character into a suit of another character. C UPENDRA NARAIN ROY v. At a later stage the plaint was amended so as to include a claim for possession of the property sold. Both the trial Court and the Court of first appeal held that consideration had passed for the sale and dismissed the suit. In second appeal it was sought to impeach the sale on the ground that it was not for antecedent debts or for legal necessity and was, therefore, not binding on the plaintiff:

The scope of Order VIII, rule 5, is only this that the omission to deny an allegation of fact in the plaint is not to be taken as an admission in the case of minor defendants, and the rule has nothing to do with the conduct of the suit afterwards. For instance, if at the framing of issues or at the trial the person representing a minor defendant admits certain allegations of fact, it cannot be said that rule 5 in any way affects such admission. What the Legislature apparently contemplated by rule 5 was that if, for instance, the guardian of a minor defendant allowed a case to proceed ex parte, then the plaintiff must prove those facts alleged in the plaint which were not expressly denied in the written statement filed on behalf of the minor defendant. M NAGAPPA v. A party may appear in two ways, either by person or by Pleader. If he is not appearing in person, the mere fact that he is standing in Court does not amount to an appearance within the real meaning of the word.

On a case being called on, the parties appeared in Court but the plaintiff did not prosecute the case. The Court dismissed the suit for the plaintiff's default. The plaintiff then applied for restoration of the suit, but the Court now held that the suit was not dismissed for default and that, therefore, it had no jurisdiction to restore it:

Held, that the order dismissing the suit was an order made under Order IX, rule 8, of the Civil Procedure Code, and that the Court was required to deal with the matter under Order IX, rule 9. PAT LALJI SAHU v. LACHMI NARAIN SINGH, 3 P. L. J. 355 27

In every such case it should be presumed under section 80 of the Evidence Act that the statement was duly taken.

Where, therefore, there is no evidence to show that the deposition of a witness in a civil suit was not read over to him by the Judge, it must be presumed under section 80 of the Evidence Act that the Judge complied with the provisions of Order XVIII, rule 5 of the Civil Procedure Code. P EMPEROR v. Order XXI, rule 2 (1), of the Civil Procedure Code, does not contemplate an inquiry being made into the truth of the statements made by the decree-holder when he comes to Court to certify a payment and the judgment-debtor has no locus standi to question the right of the decree-holder to make an application under that provision of the law.

No particular time is fixed during which the decree-holder is bound to certify payments to the Court.

When a decree-holder comes and informs the Court that certain payments have been made to him in satisfaction of the decree, all that the Court has to do is to make a note of the statement made by the decree-holder and no notice need issue to the judgment-debtor even if the decree-holder asks this to be done.

The certifying of a payment under Order XXI, rule 2 (1), Civil Procedure Code, is not conclusive in any way. On an application for execution of the decree being made, the judgment-debtor is entitled to show either that no such payment was in reality made or that if it was, it did not operate to extend the period of limitation for execution of the decree. O HAIDER MIRZA v. O. XXIII, r. 1—Withdrawal of suit on behalf of minor, when permissible—Minor, benefit of—Court, duty of, to protect interests of minor.

Courts should be very jealous of the interests of minors and should not allow a suit or part of a suit instituted on a minor's behalf to be withdrawn without being satisfied that it is for his benefit.

In a suit for a declaration that the sale of certain land will not affect the plaintiffs' reversionary rights, it appeared that the plaintiffs had in their minority sued along with certain others for the same relief asking in the alternative for pre-emption of the land sold and that, subsequently there had been an amendment of the plaint by which the other plaintiffs alone claimed pre-emption, it being stated that the minor plaintiffs had no money with which to pre-empt. Later on an application was presented by all the plaintiffs for permission to withdraw the prayer for declaration. The Court did not give its permission, nor did it consider whether the withdrawal was for the benefit of the minors. The case proceeded and eventually a decree for pre-emption was passed in favour of the adult plaintiffs, but by mistake the names of all were entered in the decree:

Held, that inasmuch as no reason was given by the next friend for withdrawing the suit on behalf of the minors, nor was the Court asked to allow the plaintiffs to withdraw from part of the suit with liberty to institute a fresh suit in respect of the subject-matter of such part, nor was the interest of the minors considered, the minors were entitled to bring a separate suit for the relief which was abandoned in the previous suit. P RAJADA v. Some mortgaged property was put up to sale in execution of a mortgage decree in 1911 and was purchased by the decree-holder. The proceeds of the sale being insufficient to satisfy the mortgage debt, the mortgagee made an application in 1913 under Order XXXIV, rule 6, for a personal decree. That application proved ineffectual and he made another application for a similar decree in 1915:

Section 199 of the Companies Act enacts that any order passed by a Court under the Act is enforceable in the same manner in which a decree passed by such Court would be. Therefore, an order of payment made under section 186 of the Companies Act must be regarded as a decree and enforced as such. This means that the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code relating to the execution of decrees are applicable to the execution of such orders.

Where such an order is sought to be enforced through a Court other than the one which passed it, section 201 of the Companies Act removes the necessity for complying with the procedure laid down in section 39 and Order XXI, rules 4 and 5, of the Civil Procedure Code, dispenses with the requirements of rule 6 of the Order, and empowers the other Court to act on a certified copy of the order alone.

An assignee or transferee of the order, however, cannot make an application for the enforcement of the order without having recourse to the procedure laid down by Order XXI, rule 16 of the Civil Procedure Code, which requires that an application by a transferee of a decree for execution after substitution of his name can be entertained only by the Court which passed the decree.

— Company's Sicca rupees, whether mean rupees in current coin.

Where in a kabuliyat of 1850 by which a patni taluk was created, the rent reserved was stated to be "Company's Sicca rupees 96:"

Held, that as the Calcutta Sicca rupee, though coined by the Company, had never become known as the "Company's Sicca rupee" the expression "Company's Sicca rupees" used in the kabuliyat must be regarded as ambiguous; so that the intention of the parties must be re-ascertained, having regard to the surrounding circumstances, such as the conduct of the parties, the date of the document, the stamp duty paid on the document, and a reference to current coin in a portion of the kabuliyat.

— Instalment bond—Default in payment of instalment—Waiver of right to sue for entire amount—Limitation, commencement of.

An instalment bond provided that the money was to be re-paid by five annual instalments and that if there was any default in payment of any of the instalments, the creditor would have the power to recover the entire amount in a lump sum. The bond was executed in 1909 and default was made in payment of the first instalment, but the plaintiff waited till the term provided in the bond had expired, when he brought a suit stating that his claim for the first 2 instalments being barred by time, he made a claim only with regard to the remaining three instalments:

Held, that under the terms of the bond the plaintiff had an option to waive his right to bring the suit at once on the happening of the first default, which right he had exercised and that, therefore, his suit with regard to the last three instalments was not barred.

favour of the plaintiff on the 17th March 1913. The mortgage was declared to be with possession and redemption was to take place after two years. On the same date a rent deed was executed under which the mortgagors agreed to take the mortgaged house on lease at Rs. 3 per mensem, it being definitely stated that the mortgagee was in possession and that he was entitled to evict the mortgagors at any time by giving them one month's notice. It was, however, agreed that the rent was to be credited to the interest due under the mortgage-deed. Both these documents were registered on the 20th March 1913. On the 4th October 1915, the mortgagee instituted the present suit for the eviction of the mortgagors and recovery of Rs. 91-15-0 due as rent. It was contended that the two documents evidenced a single transaction and that, therefore, the suit for eviction was not maintainable.

Held, (1) that the question involved in the suit being one related to the construction to be placed on the two documents concerned, a second appeal was competent;

(2) that the fact that there was no reference to the lease in the mortgage-deed was a strong indication of the separate nature of the two transactions and all that was intended by the lease was that such moneys as were payable thereunder were to be given credit for;

(3) that at the time of the execution of the rent-deed, the parties clearly intended to establish the relation of landlord and tenant between themselves and, therefore, the mortgagees were at liberty to evict the mortgagors at any time. P MANGIA RAM v. GANESH DAS, 161 P. W. R. 1918 351

A deed of sale of land contained the following clause: "Should disputes of any kind arise at any time touching the said land on the part of anybody, we will clear them all with our own funds and allow this sale to continue to you uninterruptedly without any kind of loss to you." On attempting to obtain possession, the vendee was resisted by the tenants, who asserted occupancy rights in the land. The vendee thereupon sued the tenants, whose claim was finally upheld by the High Court. In a suit by the vendee against the vendor for cancellation of sale and damages brought more than six years after the date of the sale:

Held, (1) that the provision in the sale-deed was an indemnity clause and should be construed as a continuing covenant;

(2) that the cause of action for the suit arose when it was held that the plaintiff's vendor had no Kudivaram right in the property and the suit was, therefore, within time under Article 115 of the Limitation Act. M PARVATANENI VENKATARAMAYYA v. Contract for sale of rice milled by certain firms—Election—Breach of contract.

Defendant contracted to sell a certain quantity of rice to the plaintiff, and the contract gave the seller the right of delivering the milling of seven specified firms. One of the clauses of the contract absolved the defendant from liability in case of accidents to machinery, etc. It appeared that the plaintiff agreed to accept the milling of the defendant's mill, but before the delivery was completed the mill was burnt down. Plaintiff sued the defendant for damages for non-delivery of the balance:

Held, (1) that the clause giving the option to the defendant to deliver the milling of any of the specified firms was inserted for the benefit of the defendant and that the latter could not be compelled to deliver from all the mills;

(2) that the clause relating to accidents to machinery referred to the mill from which delivery was to be taken or was being taken and that that mill having been burnt down, the defendant was absolved from giving or completing delivery of so much of the rice as remained undelivered under the contract. L B ARRACAN COY., LTD. v. Where a person agrees to advance moneys to another from time to time up to a certain limit with the object of financing a litigation by the latter, but fails or refuses to pay the full amount, he is, nevertheless, entitled, under section 64 of the Contract Act, to a refund of the amount actually advanced by him.

It depends on the terms of the document whether the subject of it is to be treated as a loan.

Where the agreement is to finance a litigation against a person in possession of certain property and in favour of persons who are themselves unable to find the necessary funds, and the person financing is to get a share of the property in the event of the success of the litigation as if the full amount was paid and no provision is made for the refund of the amount in the event of failure, the transaction cannot be treated as a loan.

Such a contract is champertous, but the promisee is entitled to recover what he has advanced in the event of the litigation ending successfully to the promisor.

A person cannot be charged with liability merely on the ground that he has benefited by a contract entered into by another.

Where a loan is charged on a property, a mere default of the lender to pay the full amount of the charge would not deprive him of his lien in respect of the money actually advanced. There will be a lien pro tanto.

Where a loan advanced with the object of financing a litigation is charged on an amount which may be secured by a compromise in the suit to be effected in a particular manner, and the compromise is effected in a different manner, the lien will not attach itself to the substituted property, especially where the parties put an end to the contract before the compromise.

Plaintiff's husband agreed on 25th May 1903 to advance moneys up to a limit of Rs. 1,50,000 to defendants Nos. 2, 3 and 4 with the object of financing a suit by the latter to recover a Zemindari, in consideration whereof the latter agreed to convey to plaintiff a 3/16ths share in the property in the event of their succeeding in the litigation. It was stipulated that the defendants should not compromise the suit with their adversaries without the lender's consent. This agreement was varied in 1908 by another, whereunder the lender was to advance two lakhs of rupees and get a fourth share and no compromise was to be entered into by the defendants without the consent of the lender or of his Vakil. The amount advanced was charged on the amount which might be secured under the compromise. Plaintiff's husband, after advancing about Rs. 70,000, declined to advance any further sum as there were misunderstandings between himself and his debtors. The suit by defendants was compromised, but not in the manner specified in the agreement. Plaintiff's husband having died, plaintiff sued to recover the amounts actually advanced and interest thereon and to have it charged on the amount of the compromise:

Held, (1) that plaintiff was entitled to a personal decree for refund;

(2) that the lien created on property to come into existence in future was valid;

(3) but that the lien could not be fastened on the amount of the compromise as plaintiff's husband had, prior thereto, broken the contract and the compromise effected was not in accordance with the agreement. M PUSAPATI VENKATAPATHIRAJU GARU v. VASAVAYA VENKATA SUBHADRAYANMA 563

The parties then agreed to refer their difference to arbitrators and the Magistrate on being informed of this dismissed the complaint. The arbitrators made an award in favour of the plaintiff and the latter applied to have it filed:

The estate of a deceased partner is not liable for a debt contracted by the surviving partner to enable him to perform a contract entered into during the former's lifetime. The creditor is entitled to proceed against the surviving partner personally and against the assets of the partnership which the surviving partner has power to pledge in discharge of an obligation created by the partnership.

Per Wallis, C. J.—Section 263 of the Contract Act cannot override the express provisions of section 261.

Per Seshagiri Aiyar, J.—Unhampered by authority, the plain interpretation of sections 251, 261 and 263 of the Contract Act read together would seem to be that a deceased partner's estate would be liable for obligations necessitated by the process of winding up the partnership business. The implication of section 261 seems to be that the estate should not be answerable for fresh liabilities created solely after the death of the partner. It is difficult to construe section 263 as not dealing with devolution caused by the death of a partner. The expression "partners" in that section must mean those who constituted the partnership before it was dissolved by the death of one of them and primi facie in the case of dissolution by death the same liability would attach as before death, provided the obligation was

One of the defendants, who had since the decree become possessed of four-fifths of the properties charged, paid off the decretal amount and then sued the other defendants for contribution:

Plaintiff contested the suit but the defendant did not, and ultimately the suit was decreed against both with costs. The decree-holder recovered the full amount of the costs from the plaintiff, who thereupon brought a suit for contribution against the defendant, claiming half the costs which he had been compelled to pay:

Plaintiff sued for possession of certain land which he valued for purposes of Court-fee and jurisdiction at Rs. 764-7-0. On an objection by the defendant that the suit had been undervalued, the Munsif appointed a Local Commissioner who fixed the value at Rs. 943, but the Munsif refused to accept this valuation and having come to the conclusion that the land was worth considerably over Rs. 1,000 returned the plaint for presentation to the proper Court. On appeal the District Judge held that the Munsif had wrongly disregarded the Commissioner's valuation and returned the case to him for disposal. The defendant preferred a second appeal to the Chief Court:

Held, (1) that in arriving at a valuation of the land the Munsif only looked at the question from the point of view of his own jurisdiction and although he decided the value for purposes of Court-fee, this decision was merely incidental to his decision on the question of the value for purposes of jurisdiction and section 12 of the Court Fees Act was not, therefore, applicable to the case;

Where a Magistrate of the first class is informed that a person is likely to disturb the public tranquillity without any information being given as to his intent to do wrongful acts and the Magistrate considers the information to have come from a reliable source, he has jurisdiction to make an order under section 112 of the Criminal Procedure Code. ss. 110, 117, 528, 530—Bad livelihood proceedings—Notice, issue of, by Magistrate to person not within jurisdiction, legality of—Proceedings drawn up on reference by District Magistrate, effect of, on want of jurisdiction—Joint trial of two persons, legality of—Misjoinder—Undivided members of Hindu family, liability of, for misconduct of particular members—Evidence, nature of—Rumour and hearsay, admissibility of—‘Repute’, meaning of—Notice to accused, form and contents of—Landlord keeping tenants of bad character, liability of—Forest offences—Statements in office files, admissibility of.

The issue of notice under section 110 of the Criminal Procedure Code is not a formal matter and the section limits the power to issue the notice to the Magistrate in whose jurisdiction the accused is.

The issue of a notice under section 110, Criminal Procedure Code, is a judicial act to be exercised after due consideration of the materials placed before the Magistrate, and not merely an executive order to be passed as a matter of course on a complaint by the Police. The issue of a notice by a Magistrate without jurisdiction cannot be justified on the ground that it was drawn up under orders from the District Magistrate.

A defect in the issue of the notice is not a mere irregularity, but the question is one of jurisdiction and falls under section 530 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

It is not legal to try two persons jointly charged under section 110 (f) of the Criminal Procedure Code.

The test to be applied in cases where a plea of misjoinder is raised is whether there has been habitual association between the persons charged in respect of the misconduct alleged in the complaint.

The fact that persons are members of an undivided family would not by itself render each member liable for the misconduct of any other member, and, where they are living separately, there is not even the presumption that one member knew and assented to the misdeeds of the other.

Evidence of general repute does not mean hearsay evidence.

The belief of a class of persons, that a particular individual has done particular acts or has characteristics of a certain kind because there are rumours to that effect in a particular place, is not admissible as evidence of repute where no facts are mentioned to indicate that there were sufficient reasons for the impression.

A notice under section 110, Criminal Procedure Code, must contain something more than a reproduction of the clauses of the section. There should be sufficient indication of the time and place of the acts charged and sufficient details to enable the accused to know what fact he is to meet, but it is not necessary to give a list of witnesses.

Criminal Procedure Code—contd.

Where, however, the defect has not been objected to in the trial Court, the High Court ought not to quash the proceedings in revision in the absence of any proof that the accused was prejudiced by the defect.

The facts that a landlord has tenants of bad character under him and lends them money when they are in difficulty or mediates between his tenants who are accused of theft and their victims, are not grounds for requiring security from the landlord under section 110.

Inferences drawn by forest officials as to persons who committed forest offences are not evidence of repute. The Court should test the sources of the information that led the officials to infer that the accused had anything to do with the offences. M KRIPASINDU NAIKO v. EMPEROR, 19 Cr. L. J. 905; 8 L. s. 110—Habitually bringing false cases in Civil Courts—Evidence of general repute, admissibility of.

Section 110 of the Criminal Procedure Code does not apply to a person who has the reputation of habitually bringing false claims in Civil Courts. Such a person may be punishable under section 209 of the Indian Penal Code, but he does not by so doing commit the offence either, if he succeeds, of extortion or, if he fails, of attempting to commit extortion.

In proceedings against such a person, although evidence of general repute is admissible, it cannot be allowed to override the findings arrived at by the Civil Courts after trial. N BAPUJEE v. EMPEROR, 19 Cr. L. J. 885

Although section 190 (c) of the Criminal Procedure Code in terms applies only to offences, the principle of that section must apply to cases of a miscellaneous character, e. g., to proceedings under section 110 of the Code.

Where a Magistrate was influenced by his preliminary local investigation in coming to a finding as to the guilt of an accused person under section 110 of the Criminal Procedure Code:

Held, that the conviction was bad inasmuch as the Magistrate should not, under the circumstances, have tried the case himself. PAT GODHAN AHIR v. EMPEROR, 19 Cr. L. J. 899

The provision in section 117 (3) of the Criminal Procedure Code must be strictly construed and is, therefore, inapplicable where the charge is under clause (f) of section 110 of the Code.

Clause (f) of section 110 of the Criminal Procedure Code is one of highly special character: evidence of general repute is not sufficient to bring a case within it, but specific acts showing that the accused recklessly disregards the safety of the persons or the property of his neighbours and actually causes danger thereto must be proved. N GANPATI v. Held, that it was not incumbent upon the Magistrate to inquire whether the party complained against had a bona fide claim of right to the channel and to refer the parties to the Civil Court if he found that the claim of right set up was bona fide, although in normal cases that course would be a wise and proper course to adopt. C FAKIR MULLICK v. Sections 145 and 146 of the Criminal Procedure Code authorize no recognition of joint possession, and no order can be passed forbidding one of the parties to interfere with the joint enjoyment by both.

Petitioners claimed the sole right to lay their warps in a certain street in a village and respondents claimed a joint right with the petitioners. The Court, holding that joint user of both parties was established, forbade petitioners from interfering with the joint enjoyment of the street by the respondents:

Held, (1) that it was not competent to the Court to find joint possession under sections 145 and 146, Criminal Procedure Code;

(2) that the right to lay warps was not a right to the possession of land but a right to the use of it and the Court should have dealt with the matter under section 147, Criminal Procedure Code;

s. 141s. 144—Jurisdiction of Magistrate to pass order—Imminent danger—Order, whether can be set aside after expiry of 2 months.

The jurisdiction of a Magistrate to pass an order under section 144, Criminal Procedure Code, depends on the urgency of the case. A mere statement by the Magistrate that he considers the case to be urgent is not sufficient to give him jurisdiction, if the facts set out by him show that in reality there is no urgent necessity for action.

In a proceeding to set aside an order of a Magistrate under section 144, Criminal Procedure Code, the High Court would not be justified in considering whether the opinion expressed by the Magistrate on the civil rights of the parties is right or wrong: what it has to consider is, whether the Magistrate's order was made with jurisdiction or not.

Where a Magistrate by an order under section 144, Criminal Procedure Code, directed the petitioner to remove an obstruction to a culvert through which drainage of the Railway menial quarters used to flow into his tank and the only fact set out in the Magistrate's judgment indicating any imminent danger was that a rainfall of one inch in an hour would flood the menial quarters and compel their evacuation:

Held, (1) that this was an imminent danger of quite a different kind to that contemplated by section 144, Criminal Procedure Code: it was a danger to the inhabitants of a particular quarter who might be inconvenienced but was not a source of danger to public health:

(2) that the order under section 144, Criminal Procedure Code, should be set aside even though more than 2 months had expired since its passing inasmuch as a prosecution of the petitioner under section 188, Indian Penal Code, for disobedience to the order had been instituted. C CHANDRA NATH MUKERJEE v. under s. 145, when should be instituted.

The provisions of section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code were enacted with the specific intention of definitely settling a quarrel after a fair hearing of each side, and proceedings under section 144 of the Code should not be substituted for proceedings under section 145 in order to evade the provisions of law which require an inquiry into the question of possession with reference to the evidence adduced by the parties.

The use of section 144 of the Criminal Procedure Code is a suitable method of avoiding a breach of the peace only if it is clear, upon a reading of the Police reports, that the claim of the party creating the disturbance is not a claim made in good faith. Where, however, the facts on the record clearly indicate that a proceeding under section 145 is necessary, the Magistrate has no jurisdiction to take action under section 144. Pat KANIZ AMINA v. Where a document, which is not per se inadmissible, is admitted by the Court in a criminal trial without formal proof of execution, and the accused having sufficient opportunity at the trial to call for formal proof omits to take any objection, he cannot afterwards, in appeal, impeach the verdict of the Jury on the ground that the document had been admitted without formal proof.

A parcha slip granted in the course of survey proceedings is not a public document and is not in any way recognised by law. It is, therefore, inadmissible in evidence to prove title or possession. In a criminal trial, however, the Judge is competent to draw the attention of the Jury to the fact that the parcha slip was granted to a particular person as a fact relevant to the question of possession.

Criminal Procedure Code—contd.

The omission to draw the attention of the Jury to the provisions of section 103-B of the Bengal Tenancy Act and the presumption arising therefrom does not constitute a serious error on the part of the Judge, where the point has been thoroughly discussed by Counsel and the Jury are under no misconception regarding it.

Where there is no evidence of a particular matter, it would be an error on the part of the Judge to lay down the law to the Jury on that matter, which is not a matter legally and properly before the Jury.

The ability of the Counsel engaged in the defence does not relieve the Judge of his task, which the law imposes upon him, of fully and fairly charging the Jury. At the same time it is reasonable that the Judge should take into account the elaboration and the skill of Counsel.

Decree conditional on payment of money within certain period, whether can be altered—Jurisdiction of Court—Discretion, exercise of—High Court, power of interference of.

Once certain terms are embodied in a decree the Court itself which passed the decree, even if it so desires, has no jurisdiction to alter it save on an application for review of judgment.

Where, therefore, a Court made a decree in plaintiff's favour conditional upon his paying an extra Court-fee within a certain time and directed that the suit would stand dismissed in the case of non-compliance with the condition:

Held, that the Court had no jurisdiction to interfere with the decree by extending the time for payment of the extra Court-fee. A SAJJADI BEGAM v. DILAWAR HUSAIN, 16 A. L. J. 625; 40 A. 579 4 — Fair comment, plea of—Solicitor, conduct of, whether matter of public interest—Journalist, duty of.

The conduct of a Solicitor of the High Court, as disclosed in proceedings in the High Court, is a topic of public interest and importance.

While a journalist is bound to comment on public questions with care, reason and judgment, he is not necessarily deprived of his privilege merely because there are slight unimportant deviations from absolute accuracy of statement, where those deviations do not affect the general fairness of the comment. The articles must be considered rather in their entirety than by separate insistence on isolated passages, and the Court must decide what impression would be produced on the mind of an unprejudiced reader, who, knowing nothing of the matter beforehand, read the article straight through.

Comment to be fair must be comment on facts truly stated, though later they may turn out not to be true at all.

It is no part of the law of fair comment that the comment must be the writer's own: he is as much entitled to publish derivative as original comment if it be fair, and he chooses to adopt the former and make it his own.

Fair comment impliedly permits of a much greater latitude than the drawing of inevitable inferences. All that is required is that the inference from facts truly stated should be fair, that is, one possibly out of many equally or almost equally fair inferences.

It is doubtful whether the standard to be applied in determining, whether comment is fair or not, varies according to the station of the plaintiff, and the degree of personality in the libel. All that is essential in this connection is, whether the subject-matter of the libel is of public importance. If it is, it can make no difference whether the person complaining of it is an author, a statesman, or an attorney; once that point is settled against the plaintiff the resultant comment has to be justified upon exactly the same loose general principles, and sentimental considerations ought to have no play. B SURAJMAL v. Divorce Act (IV of 1869), s. 4—Christian Marriage Act (XV of 1872), ss. 4, 5—Jurisdiction of Court in matrimonial matters—Fraud, whether ground for annulling marriage—Consent—"Rules, rites, ceremonies and customs" of church, meaning of—"Solemnised", meaning of.

Section 4 of the Divorce Act, which provides that the jurisdiction exercised by the High Court in all causes, suits and matters matrimonial shall be exercised subject to the provisions of the Divorce

Divorce Act—concl'd.

Act and not otherwise, does not preclude the Court from considering the provisions of sections 4 and 5 of the Christian Marriage Act and declaring a particular marriage void as not having been solemnised in accordance therewith.

The word "solemnised" in section 5 of the Christian Marriage Act means "celebrated" and refers to the ceremony only.

Section 5 of the Christian Marriage Act deals only with the ceremony and the person who may perform it, and not with the capacity of the persons on whom it is performed or with the capacity of the person who performs it, save that he should have received episcopal ordination.

There is no degree of deception which can avail to set aside a contract of marriage knowingly made, unless the party imposed upon has been deceived as to the person and thus has given no consent at all.

When fraud is spoken of as avoiding a marriage, it means such fraud as procures the appearance without the reality of consent; it does not include such fraud as induces a consent, nor fraud which is practised on a third party in order to procure a license. L B CONSTERDINE v. Escheat—Resident in village dying without heirs—Zemindar, right of—Wajib-ul-arz, entry in, value of—Grant, construction of—Burden of proof.

A sahukar, who was the owner and occupier of a house situate within the limits of Mouza S and also within the limits of the town of G, died without leaving heirs and the Secretary of State took possession of the house and its site as the ultimate heir to the property of a deceased person. The plaintiff claimed the site as the Zemindar under the Settlement of 1850, by which the Government had conferred upon him revenue-free proprietary rights over the soil of Mouza S, and asserted that the deceased was owner only of the materials of the house with a right of residence therein but had no right to transfer the site or the right of residence. The wajib-ul-arz of the Mouza provided that residents of the Mouza had no proprietary rights in anything except the materials of the houses, that they could not sell the site or the right of residence in the sites and that in the event of the death of an occupier of such a house, without legal heirs, the proprietor of the Mouza would be entitled to possession of the house along with the site. The defendant contended that the house in suit, being situated within the limits of a town, was not subject to the ordinary law governing the relations between occupiers of houses and the ground landlord in the inhabited sites of agricultural villages:

Held, (1) that unless the defendant could show that the effect of the Settlement of 1850 was not to grant to the proprietor in the mahal in the village any substantial rights of ownership in respect of what was described in the papers of that Settlement as the abadi appertaining to the mahal, the defendant could not successfully maintain that the residents possessed anything more than a limited interest in the houses occupied by them or in their sites;

(2) that upon the evidence, as between the parties to the suit, it must be held that the plaintiff had successfully discharged the burden of proof which lay upon him and that the deceased did not possess an absolute interest alienable at his will and pleasure in respect of the property in suit but merely a limited interest which could not be the subject of escheat to the Crown. A BHARATPUR STATE v. Accused went to a Police Station and made the report "I have killed my wife and her corpse is lying in my house," in consequence of which the Police, proceeding to his house, discovered the corpse of his wife in an inner room of the house:

Held, that under section 27 of the Evidence Act the officer who had taken down the statement of the accused was entitled to depose that the accused came to him at the time and place stated and said: "I have killed my wife and her corpse is lying in my house," and that in consequence of that statement the woman's corpse was discovered as indicated by the accused; but that when this had been deposed by the prosecution, the defence were entitled to require the production of the record made at the Police Station and to insist upon proof of the whole of that record.

Per Walsh, J.—Where there is no evidence of offence except a confession, the confession must be taken as a whole. One F. instituted a suit for pre-emption of the property:

Held, (1) that the sale-deed being an out and out sale in express terms, as soon as that sale was completed the right of pre-emption accrued and F. was, therefore, entitled to a decree;

(2) that oral evidence to show that at the time of the execution of the sale-deed the agreement to reconvey was in contemplation was inadmissible under section 92 of the Evidence Act.

Evidence Act--conold.

— S. 115, applicability of—Oral evidence to show nature of transaction contained in deed, admissibility of—Pre-emption, suit for—Estoppel, doctrine of, applicability of.

Parties to a transaction which is not really an out and out sale are not estopped in a suit for pre-emption brought by a third party from adducing oral evidence to show the real nature of the transaction, even when the document evidencing the transfer stands in the form of a sale-deed.

Section 115 of the Evidence Act contemplates some act or conduct affecting the party pleading it and having the effect of inducing him to change his position for the worse.

Unless a transaction is really one which gives rise in law to a right of pre-emption, no such right can be obtained by means of an estoppel.

There is no estoppel where all that is proved is that the transaction in dispute was in form a sale and that the plaintiff treated it as a sale for the purpose of bringing a suit for pre-emption which he would not otherwise have been entitled to bring. O BISHUNATH SINGH v. BALDEO SINGH, 21 O. C. 65 194

— S. 115—Estoppel, requisites of—Suit in Revenue Court to establish occupancy rights—Subsequent suit in Civil Court for possession as owner, maintainability of.

A piece of land, which was originally shamilat, fell on partition to the share of the defendant, who caused a notice of ejectment to be served on the plaintiff who was in possession of the land. The plaintiff brought a suit in the Revenue Court to contest the notice of ejectment, on the ground that he was a tenant with rights of occupancy in the land. The Revenue Court held that he was not an occupancy tenant, and he was consequently ejected. He then brought a suit for possession as owner of the land in the Civil Court:

Held, that inasmuch as the defendant was not caused to shift his position in consequence of anything represented to him by the plaintiff, the requisites necessary to constitute estoppel as defined in section 115 of the Evidence Act did not exist and the plaintiff was not, therefore, estopped from establishing that he was the owner of the land in dispute.

In order to bring a case within section 115 of the Evidence Act there must have been, (1) a representation which amounts to an intention of causing or permitting to believe in another; (2) belief on the part of that other; and (3) an action arising out of that belief. P HAR LAL v. Execution—Application dismissed for default—Restoration—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 151, O. IX, r. 9, applicability of—Jurisdiction—Res judicata.

Execution—contd.

Order IX of the Civil Procedure Code does not apply to execution proceedings.

An application for execution dismissed for default cannot be restored either under Order IX or under section 151 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

There is nothing in the Civil Procedure Code which ousts the jurisdiction of an executing Court to go into the merits of the judgment-debtor's objection even though the executing creditor is absent.

Where, rightly or wrongly, a Court with jurisdiction has disposed of the judgment-debtor's objections on the merits and has decided that the decree-holder is not competent by reason of a defect of parties to proceed with the execution, the decision is binding on the decree-holder till it is set aside. PAT RITU KUER v. — Attachment by consent, effect of—Estoppel—Judgment-debtor, whether can object to sale—Order directing occupancy holding to be sold—Appeal, whether lies.

The primary object of an attachment is that pending the sale the right of the judgment-debtor in the property shall be kept intact for the benefit of any possible purchaser.

Consent to attachment means only that the owner of the property attached accepts the limitation put upon his right to alienate the property pending the attachment.

Plaintiff obtained an ex parte money decree against the defendant. The latter applied for a re-hearing of the case and pending the re-hearing consented to the attachment of an occupancy holding belonging to him. The case was again decreed against the defendant and the plaintiff applied to have the decree executed by sale of the attached holding. The defendant objected that the holding was not transferable and that he had no saleable interest therein. The Munsif held that the holding could not be sold but that the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor could be sold. On appeal the District Judge held that the defendant having consented to the attachment was estopped from objecting to the sale:

Held, (1) that the Munsif's order was appealable;

(2) that it was idle for the Munsif to put up to sale the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor when the whole question before him was whether the judgment-debtor had any right, title or interest in the holding at all;

Execution of decree—Application for attachment of moveables—Subsequent application for attachment of immoveables, whether in continuation of previous application—Limitation.

On the 26th of August 1916 a decree-holder made an application for execution of a decree for arrears of rent, which he had obtained on the 10th of December 1914, praying for the attachment and sale of the judgment-debtor's moveable properties. Processes were issued accordingly, but as the result of proceedings taken by the judgment-debtor, the attachment of moveables was found to be impracticable. Thereupon on the 22nd February 1917 the decree-holder prayed that he should be permitted to proceed against the judgment-debtor's immovable properties. Permission was granted and on the 24th February 1917 the decree-holder filed a list of the immovable properties against which he desired that proceedings should be taken:

Held, that the applications of the 22nd and 24th February 1917 should be regarded and treated as in continuation of the application made on the 26th August 1916 and that, therefore, there was no bar of limitation to the execution sought by the decree-holder.

Where on an application for execution of a decree made in accordance with law, execution cannot be successfully taken against the property specified in the application by reason of causes for which the decree-holder is in no way responsible, he should not be confined to the properties first specified, but it is open to him to ask the Court to proceed against other properties specified in his further supplementary list. C MOHINI MOHAN SIKKAR v. — Ex parte decree set aside on ground of fraud—Revival of suit—Procedure—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1903), O. XXIII, r. 3—Adjustment of suit.

The defendants instituted a suit to set aside an ex parte decree on the ground of fraud. The specific fraud alleged was to the effect that the plaintiff had agreed on a receipt of Rs. 44 from the defendants to withdraw from the suit but that he had not intimated this arrangement to the Court and had, on the other hand, taken advantage of the absence of the defendants to secure against them an ex parte decree. This allegation was fully established and the ex parte decree was set aside on the ground of fraud:

Held, that the setting aside of the ex parte decree revived the original suit and that the parties were restored to the position they occupied on the day the ex parte decree was made, so that the agreement between the parties under which the plaintiff had to withdraw from the suit on receipt of Rs. 44 should be carried into effect by a decree of the Court under Order XXIII, rule 3, Civil Procedure Code, as an adjustment of the suit. C NISTARINI DAS v. The employment of an Agency Munsif by the Government Agent to execute a decree of the latter's Court under rule 10 of the Godaveri Agency Rules does not make the Agency Munsif the incumbent of the judicial office of the Government Agent himself. The Government Agent continues to preside in his own Court and the Agency Munsif is only an employee under the Government Agent in the matter of the execution of that particular decree. He occupies the same position as a Commissioner or an Amin or a Ministerial officer employed by an ordinary Court to assist it in particular judicial proceedings.

An order, therefore, passed by the Agency Munsif in the course of execution of a decree of the Government Agent, is not a decree, and no appeal lies against it to the Government under rule 16 of the Agency Rules.

The proceedings of a Subordinate Officer of a Court of Justice do not become the proceedings of the Court itself unless the Statute Law makes them so in respect of particular matters or unless those proceedings are submitted to the Presiding Officer of the Court and adopted or approved of by him. M MANAYAM MAHALAKSHAMAMMA GARU v. s. 107—'Superintendence,' meaning of—Judgments of Courts subordinate to High Court—Irrelevant and scandalous matter, expunging of, application for—Jurisdiction.

Per Abdur Rahim, J. (Oldfield, J. dissenting).—The High Court has jurisdiction to expunge irrelevant and scandalous matters in the judgments of Courts subordinate to it under section 107 of the Government of India Act, 1915. Such powers are of extremely wide character but must be exercised in extremely exceptional cases, and with great caution. They are covered by the expression 'superintendence' in the section.

Per Oldfield, J.—The High Court has not the power to expunge irrelevant and scandalous matters in the judgments of subordinate Courts under section 107 of the Government of India Act, 1915, especially when the application to expunge them is made by persons who are not parties to the proceedings. M KRISHNASWAMI AYYANGAR, In re, 35 M. Grants, kinds of—Resumption—Burden of proof.

For the purposes of resumption all ancient grants fall into two main categories: grants of lands burdened with service, and grants of office to which lands are annexed by way of remuneration instead of or along with cash. The former grants are always irresumable, unless the grantor can show that they have been specially conditioned so as to enable him to resume for failure to perform these services, or at his own will to discontinue the services and resume the lands. Grants under the second category are always resumable, unless the grantee can show that they have been specially conditioned otherwise so as to prevent their resumability. In every case it is always a question of fact to determine, whether the grant in suit falls within the first or the second category and the burden of proof must necessarily be upon the grantor seeking to resume to show that either the grant was of a kind falling under the second category, or if a grant of the kind falling under the first category, that it was specially conditioned. B CHANDRAPPA BASWANTRAO DESAI v. Gujarat Talukdars' Act (VI Bom. of 1888), s. 29 E Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch I, Art. 182 (5)—Decree against talukdar—Execution, application for, unaccompanied by certificate of managing officer, whether "in accordance with law"—Time between date of decree and submission of decretal claim, exclusion of.

The plaintiff obtained an instalment decree on the 16th September 1910 against the defendants who were talukdars. The first instalment became payable on the 1st April 1911, and in consequence of the default in payment, the whole amount became payable on that day. The plaintiff presented an application for execution on the 1st April 1914, but it was rejected on the 15th June 1914 as the certificate of the managing officer required by section 29 E of the Gujarat Talukdars' Act was not produced. Subsequently the plaintiff applied to the managing officer for a certificate in August 1914 and obtained a certificate on the 29th August 1914. He then made the present application for execution on the 28th February 1916 accompanied with the certificate of the managing officer.

Held, that the plaintiff was entitled under section 22 E, sub-section (3) of the Gujarat Talukdars' Act to exclude the period from the 16th September 1910, the date of the decree, to August 1914, the date of the submission of the claim under the decree, from the period allowed for the execution of the decree, and that, therefore, the application of the 28th February 1916 was within time.

Per Shah, J.—The application of the 1st April 1914 was in accordance with law within the meaning of Article 182 (5) of Schedule I of the Limitation Act and operated to save limitation, although no certificate of the managing officer was produced as required by section 29 E (1) of the Gujarat Talukdars' Act.

The words "in accordance with law" in Article 182 (5) of Schedule I of the Limitation Act refer to the form and procedure relating to the application, unless there is a clear and definite prohibition outside the Act which would render an application not in accordance with law within the meaning of the Limitation Act.

Section 29E of the Gujarat Talukdars' Act does not lay down any prohibition against execution, but only provides a method of securing the result that execution shall not be proceeded with until the certificate that the decree-claim has been duly submitted, is produced or until the prescribed period has expired after the decree-holder has made a proper effort to obtain the certificate. Therefore in spite of the provisions of section 29E it is permissible to a decree-holder to apply in accordance with law for execution in order to save limitation under Article 182 of the Limitation Act without obtaining the certificate under section 29E, though it is not permissible to proceed with the actual execution in the absence of the certificate.

Per Marten, J.—An application for execution of a decree against a talukdar which is not accompanied by the certificate required by section 29E (1) of the Gujarat Talukdars' Act, is neither "in accordance with law" nor made to the "proper Court" within the meaning of clause (5) of Article 182 of Schedule I of the Limitation Act and does not, therefore, operate to extend the limitation under that clause. B HARGOVIND FULCHAND v. NAJA SURA, 20 Bom. Hindu Law—Archaka, succession to office and emoluments of—Widow, whether excluded from inheritance.

Held, per Curiam (Sadasiva Aiyar, J., dissenting).—A Hindu widow is not disqualified by reason of her sex from inheriting the service and emoluments of an Archaka office held by her husband.

Per Wallis, C. J.—The succession to temple offices is governed by user, which is taken to represent the intentions of the founder, and in Southern India the user in the case of temple Archakas is that the office is hereditary and descends in the ordinary course of succession to women, who are not themselves competent to perform the duties of the office by ministering in the temple and perform them by deputy.

Per Sadasiva Aiyar, J.—There is no distinction in principle between the incompetency of a claimant to the office of Archaka by reason of sex and the incompetency due to any other cause. So long as a Hindu widow is held incompetent by reason of her sex from performing the duties of a priestly office, she is also incompetent to inherit the service and emoluments of the office. M ANNAYA TANTRI v. AMMAKA HENGSI, 35 M. There is no limit of time during which a Hindu widow may act upon the authority given to her to adopt a son to her deceased husband.

Where a Hindu son, whether natural or adopted, having inherited the property of his deceased father, dies leaving a son, or widow, or any other person as his heir other than the widow of his father, any power to adopt held by his father's widow comes to an end. Where a Hindu widow adopts a minor son to her deceased husband and an agreement is entered into between her and the parents of the adopted child acting on the latter's behalf, whereby a life-interest in the estate of her deceased husband is reserved to the widow, the agreement is binding on the minor, provided at the time it was entered into it was a fair and reasonable agreement which to any reasonable man would have appeared for the benefit of the minor. Pat KESHOBI KUMARI v. SATYA NARAYAN SINGH, 5 P. Where a loan is advanced to a Hindu widow for legal necessity, the lender is not bound to ascertain how the necessity for the loan was brought about. Even if it is found that the necessity arose owing to the mismanagement of the estate by the widow the lender is entitled to recover the loan, unless it is shown that he acted mala fide.

Where the necessity for the loan is apparent, the lender is not required to make any particular enquiry about it.

A creditor who advances money to a Hindu widow for legal necessity at a high rate of interest is not entitled to recover interest at that rate, unless he explains why that rate was fixed. In such cases the creditor should be allowed a reasonable rate of interest. O DWARKA PRASAD v. PRITHIPAL SINGH, 5 O. L. J. 271

by widow—Suit for possession by reversioner against alienee from widow—Right of co-reversioner defendant to obtain decree for his share.

Plaintiff sued for recovery of his share of property from 1st defendant, who was an alienee from a Hindu widow. The plaintiff was a reversioner next after the widow, as also was the 2nd defendant. The 2nd defendant offered to pay Court-fee for his share, in the event of the plaintiff succeeding in the suit. The plaintiff obtained a decree for possession of his share, and defendants Nos. 3 to 5, legal representatives of 2nd defendant, claimed a decree for their share:

Guardian—Father, rights of, as natural guardian, whether affected by conversion to other religion—Caste Disabilities Removal Act (XXI of 1850), s. 1.

That portion of the Hindu Law which disqualifies a father, on account of the loss of caste involved in his conversion to any other religion, from becoming the guardian of his children after his conversion having been abrogated by Act XXI of 1850, the mere fact of conversion of a Hindu father to Islam is not, per se, sufficient to deprive him of his natural rights of guardianship over his children. S MAHOMED YAKUB v. 897 Joint family — Alienation—Necessity, absence of—Decree against father—Decree held not binding on sons' sons, effect of—Consideration, whether charge on share—Pious obligation—Res judicata.

Where a sale by a Hindu father is held to be not binding on the share of the sons, the purchaser is not entitled to any charge on the latter's share for any portion of the consideration for the sale.

In such a case the purchaser cannot treat the consideration which he seeks to get refunded as a debt of the father which it is the pious duty of the sons to repay.

A decree against the father will not operate as res judicata in a suit by the sons to set aside the sale in respect of their shares in the property. M KILARU KOTAYYA v. POLAVARAPU DURGAYYA, 35 M. L. J. 451

192 Debt, antecedent — Personal covenant in simple mortgage, whether antecedent debt — Son, liability of, to pay father's debts.

The personal obligation comprised in every simple mortgage may be separated from the mortgage debt, and though the mortgage may in certain circumstances be invalid, the personal obligation to repay the money may amount to an antecedent debt which a Hindu son may be under an obligation to pay if it was incurred for purposes neither illegal nor immoral. O RAMMAN LAL v. So long as the father in a Hindu family is alive; the pious obligation to discharge his debts which is imposed by the Hindu Law upon his sons cannot be enforced.

Under a decree against any individual co-parcener for his separate debt, a creditor may during the life of the debtor seize and sell his undivided interest in the family property. O MANNA LAL v. BHAGWANDIN, 5 O. L. J. 447

679 Decree against father—Sale of ancestral property—Sons, whether can object.

A Hindu son is bound by a sale of his share in joint ancestral property held in execution of a decree obtained against his father, even where it is not shown that the debt was incurred by the father for legal necessity. The only exception is where the debt was an immoral one.

In a suit for accounts the defendant obtained an ex parte decree against the plaintiffs' father who was his agent and in execution of that decree brought to sale the joint property of the plaintiffs and their father and purchased it himself:

Held, that the sale was binding on the plaintiffs, inasmuch as the liability of their father was an ordinary civil liability and there was nothing to show that it was immoral. Pat GADADHAR RAMANUJ DAS v. GHANA SHYAM DAS, 3 P. L. J. 533

Hindu Law—contd.

Joint family—Decree against undivided father, execution of, against sons' shares—Liability of sons in absence of proof of immorality or illegality—Antecedent debt—Attachment of property—Intention of decree-holder, when material—Proof of immorality, nature of.

An execution creditor is entitled to sell the whole of the estate of a joint Hindu family consisting of a father and his sons and governed by the Mitakshara Law in execution of a decree obtained against the father alone, unless it is shown that the debt for which the decree was obtained was incurred for illegal or immoral purposes.

Where joint family property including the shares of two undivided sons was attached and sold in execution of a decree obtained against the father on a pro-note executed by him, and the sons preferred a claim for the release of their shares which was dismissed and subsequently brought a suit for a declaration that their share of the property could not be attached and sold in execution of the decree:

Held, that in the absence of proof that the debt in respect of which the decree was obtained was (i) incurred for illegal or immoral purposes or (ii) borrowed by the father solely to enable him to sell the whole property including the sons' shares, the decree-holder was entitled in execution to proceed against the whole of the property including the shares of the sons.

Per Krishnan, J.—It is only when it is doubtful what was attached and sold in Court-auction, as, for example, when the property attached and sold was "the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor," that the intention of the attaching creditor becomes important.

If the father's debt in execution of which the shares of the sons are also attached was contracted merely for the purpose of enabling the father to sell the whole property including his sons' shares and if the father suffered a decree to be passed in furtherance of that purpose, the decree-holder cannot be permitted to sell the shares of the sons.

Evidence to show that the father led an immoral life will not be sufficient to exclude the father's right to sell the joint property. There must be evidence to show that the particular debt in question was contracted for an immoral purpose. M SUBBA RAO v SWAMIA PILLAI, 7 L. W. 497

Maintenance of junior members—Basis of right—Impartible zemindari, whether subject of co-parcenary—Custom—Maintenance out of impartible zemindari.

The right to maintenance of the junior members of a Mitakshara joint family, so far as founded on or inseparable from the right of co-parcenary, begins where co-parcenary begins and ceases where co-parcenary ceases.

Two other categories of persons have by special texts a right to maintenance under the Mitakshara Law, viz., (1) Those who are debarred from inheriting by personal disqualifications e.g., the idiot, the blind from birth, the insane, etc. (2) Certain near relations, viz., the widow, the parent and the infant child. But these categories are exhaustive.

In impartible properties there is no co-parcenary, hence in such properties no one can claim maintenance on the ground that but for the

Custom may and does affirm a right to maintenance out of an impartible Raj in certain members of the family. In the case of sons this custom is so well recognised that proof of it in individual cases is unnecessary. But there is no invariable or certain custom that any one below the first generation from the late Raja can claim maintenance as of right: any special custom to that effect must be pleaded and proved.

The grandson of the late Rajah of Pittapur, an impartible Raj, sued the devisee of the Raj for maintenance on the ground that by birth he had a right to maintenance out of the property constituting the Raj, which right followed the property into the hands of a third party:

Held, that there was no legal basis for any such claim. P C GANGADHARA RAMA RAO v. RAJAH OF PITTAPUR, 5 P. L. W. 267; 35 M. L. J. 392; 24 M. L. T. 276; 16 A. L. J. 833; 41 M. 778; 28 C. L. J. 423; 29 Bom L. R. 1056

Putrika-putra son, whether recognised—Presents to natural father, whether vitiate adoption—Ceremonies for adoption, when can be dispensed with—Gotra, same, of adoptive father and adopted boy, effect of.

Per Stuart, A. J. C.—Although the practice of begetting a putrika-putra son has fallen into disuse, it is nevertheless recognised by the Mitakshara Law.

Under the Hindu Law an adoption is not vitiated by the payment of a price for an adopted son.

A male Hindu under the Mitakshara Law can only change his gotra on adoption.

Per Kanhaiya Lal, A. J. C.—According to the Hindu Law, a son affiliated in the putrika-putra form is a valid substitute for a son. The ease with which a son could be obtained by adoption has had the effect in the course of time of rendering affiliation in the form of putrika-putra more or less uncommon, but it has by no means become obsolete and effect cannot legitimately be refused to an affiliation in the putrika putra form if it is made.

The supply of clothes or ornaments to the parents of the boy to be adopted or the payment of money therefor in anticipation of the adoption cannot invalidate the adoption or be taken to indicate that it was made from sinful or improper motives.

The performance of requisite ceremonies for adoption can be dispensed with, if the adoptive father and the adopted boy belong to the same gotra. O LAL TRIBHAWAN NATH SINGH v. DEPUTY COMMISSIONER, FYZABAD, 5 O. L. J. 294

Partition—Construction of deed—Division of all family properties except outstandings—Severance in status—Presumption—Partial partition, validity of.

A deed of partition executed between a Hindu father and son recited that the division was effected owing to misunderstandings among the female members of the family and that the properties mentioned in the schedule were divided. The outstandings due to the family were not mentioned in the schedule:

Held, (Wallis, C. J., dubitante) that the family became divided in status even in respect of the outstandings.

Per Wallis, C. J.—The mere fact that members of a joint Hindu family execute a document dividing a particular item of property is not sufficient to raise a presumption that they intend to become divided in status. If such a presumption is to be raised, there must be something else in the document to raise it.

Per Seshagiri Aiyar, J.—When one member of a joint family intimates his willingness to get separate from others, that effects a division in status and where a partition is effected not specifically dealing with some items of the joint property, the status of coparcenary cannot be deemed to be continued in respect of this property which is not divided. M SUBBA REDDI v. Partition—Jestabagam, or allotment of extra share to eldest member, validity of—Living in commensality and failure to keep accounts after partition, effect of—Re-union or release—Throwing extra share into hotchpot, effect of—Registered document, whether necessary.

The old idea of giving jestabagam or an extra share to the eldest member of a Hindu family has become obsolete and the allotment of such a share at a partition will not be binding on the other shares.

The fact that after partition, the members lived in commensality, incurring marriage expenses indiscriminately will not, under Hindu Law, amount to a re-union.

The joint living of the members after partition, or their failure to keep accounts, or their incurring marriage expenses indiscriminately or making acquisitions jointly or even the throwing in of an extra share by the eldest members into hotchpot will not have the effect of converting separate property into common property. The extra share cannot be given up except by a document duly registered. M VENKATA REDDI v. KUPPA REDDI, 8 L. W. 400; (1918) M. W. N. 680

Succession, whether can be altered by agreement—Grant, construction of—Sanad laying down special rule of succession, validity of—Successive life-estates, whether can be created in favour of unborn persons—Custom, family, proof of—Evidence.

A grant of lands made by a Hindu in favour of another Hindu, in so far as it lays down a rule of succession unknown to the Hindu Law, is absolutely void.

The Hindu Law does not permit the creation of successive life-estates in favour of unborn persons, the estate itself remaining undisposed of.

An agreement between a grantor and a grantee cannot alter the line of succession according to law.

A rule of succession laid down in a grant creating successive life-estates in the property granted to certain female members of a Hindu family cannot be binding upon the family even though it has been actually followed in the family for a long time, unless it has ripened into a family custom.

In deciding the question whether there was a family usage under which certain female members of a family acquired by succession ownership to the family property, the fact that the female members who were in possession of the properties for the time being made transfers and otherwise dealt with the properties as if they were owners thereof, cannot be excluded from consideration.

In order to establish a kulachar (family custom) it must be shown that the custom has existed from time immemorial, and where the custom set up is peculiar only to a single family the rule is more strictly enforced than in other cases. C AMBALIKA DASI v. Widow—Compromise by widow, whether binding on reversioners—Collusion—Burden of proof.

A Hindu widow is entitled to avoid the expenses of litigation by compromising a bona fide claim, subject to the qualification that the compromise is made for the benefit of the estate and not for the personal advantage of the widow.

Where, however, the reversioners seek to set aside such a compromise, the burden is on them to show that the compromise was entered into by the widow collusively for the purpose of conferring upon herself a benefit at the expense of the estate. Pat RAM SUMRAN PROSAD v. SHYAM KUMARI 697

Maintenance, arrears of—Court, power of, to award arrears—Demand, whether necessary.

In dealing with claims for arrears of maintenance made by Hindu widows Courts possess a large discretion to grant or withhold those arrears with special reference to the urgent needs and necessities of the widow.

As soon as the widow satisfies the Court that she was in want at the time at which she was entitled to maintenance, provided that time is within the period of limitation, the Court might in any given case award her arrears to that extent, and that would be quite independent of any demand on her part. In other words, while a demand is allowed to be prima facie evidence of need on the widow's part, it is not in a demand that the right to obtain arrears of maintenance is rooted. Nor is any demand necessary. B KARBASAPPA GOOLAPPA NAREGAL v. KALLAVA GOOLAPPA NAREGAL, 20 Bom. L. R. 823 623 whole family properties against P. and K., the widows of the two predeceased brothers, who both alleged that the brothers died separate, and one L., who claimed the whole estate as the adopted son of P. and her husband, agreeing with R.'s contention that her husband died undivided. The adoption set up by L. was questioned by R. and K. and the division set up by P. and K. was questioned by R. and L. A compromise was entered into, whereby R. consented to take a fourth of the estate absolutely for herself and a fourth absolutely for her only daughter who was then alive, P. and K. each got a fourth absolutely for themselves and L.'s adoption was recognised but he was to take P.'s one-fourth. Subsequently L. got himself registered as the proprietor of P.'s one-fourth share with her consent. On R.'s death, which had been preceded by that of her daughter, L. brought two suits against those who claimed under R. and her daughter and against K. and those who claimed under her claiming the properties respectively in their possession:

Held, (1) that L. had by his part in the compromise induced R. to change her position to her own detriment and to L.'s substantial benefit and that L. was, therefore, estopped from claiming as a reversioner;

(2) that for the same reason, the suit against K. and those claiming under her must also fail. P C KANHAI LAL v. BRIJ LAL, 40 A. 457; 28 C. L. J. 314; 5 P. L. W. 294; 22 C. W. N. 914; 8 L. W. 212; 24 M. L. T. 236; 35 M. L. J. 459; 16 A. L. J. 825; (1918) M. W. N. 709; 20 Bom. L. R. 1048

A reversionary heir has a mere spes successione which he cannot validly transfer.

If two widows or two daughters taking jointly the estate of their deceased husband or father make an arrangement for separate possession and enjoyment, the arrangement will not ordinarily deprive the survivor of her right to the whole estate or enable the ladies to confer a title on a third party which will not terminate at the latest with the life of that survivor.

There can be no relinquishment by a Hindu female heiress of anything less than the entire estate.

The case-law of Bengal recognizes not merely the relinquishment by the widow of her husband's entire estate but the sale of the entirety to the next reversioner or with his consent to a third party.

A partial alienation of her husband's estate by a Hindu widow, even with the consent of the next reversioner, is not valid unless made for legal necessity. The consent of the next reversioner is merely strong presumptive evidence of necessity, but the presumption is not conclusive.

The propriety of an alienation with the consent of the next reversioner may come in question not only with reference to the conduct of the widow, whether or not she was justified by necessity, but also with reference to the conduct of the next reversioner, whether or not his conduct was honest. If in the absence of legal necessity he engineered the transaction to suit his own ends and for his own immediate gain, his consent would lose all its virtue. The transaction would stand no higher than a partial alienation in his favour, and would have to be judged from that standpoint. Nevertheless whatever might be said of the conduct of the widow or the next reversioner, the transferee, if he made due enquiry and acted bona fide, would acquire a good title. Nor would the antecedent mismanagement of the estate affect him unless he was in some way a contributory party thereto. C SHYAMADAS ROY v. RADHIKA PROSAD, 22 C. W. N. 846

A suit by two of the reversioners of a deceased Hindu against his widow for a declaration that an alleged Will by the deceased was not genuine ended in a compromise which provided that the property should go to the reversioners on the widow's death. One of the reversioners having predeceased the widow, the survivor claimed the entire property, on the death of the widow, to the exclusion of the deceased reversioner's sons:

Held, that, by the compromise, the reversioners took a vested interest in the property which did not pass by survivorship, but was heritable and divisible between the two donees. M KRISHNA IYER v. SWAMI NATHA IYER, (1918) M. W. N. 503; 8 L. W. 140; 24 M. L. T. 101

—ss. 4, 14, scope of—Limitation, expiry of, on holiday—Plaint, presentation of, on succeeding day, in wrong Court, effect of—Institution in wrong Court for prompt realisation of debt—Good faith—Return of plaint for presentation to proper Court.

Section 4 of the Limitation Act is a particular statutory provision, not for the purpose of computing the period of limitation prescribed as in section 14, but allowing in certain circumstances the filing of suits after the period has expired.

The section can be availed of only if the suit, appeal or application is filed in the proper Court when the time for doing so has expired on a holiday.

Section 14 of the Limitation Act only prescribes a certain rule to be observed in computing the period of limitation prescribed for a suit, appeal or application, i. e., in reckoning the number of days if time has expired, the period allowed by the section may be deducted from the period that has actually expired.

Where a plaintiff instituted a suit on the day after the last day of limitation, the last day being a holiday in a Court within whose jurisdiction one only of the defendants resided and the Court declining to give leave under section 20 (b), Civil Procedure Code, returned the plaint for presentation to the proper Court, which was subsequently done:

Held, that the plaint not having been presented to a proper Court on the day after the last day of limitation, the suit was barred.

ss. 9, 15, applicability of—"Disability" and "inability", meanings of—Alien enemy, right of suit of—Limitation, running of.

Section 9 of the Limitation Act covers the case of an alien enemy who is debarred from suing in consequence of a declaration of war.

The general rule is that once limitation has begun to run, a subsequent "disability" to sue will not avail to stop it in the absence of express statutory provision.

Per Sanderson, C. J.—The Legislature in enacting section 9 of the Limitation Act did not mean exactly the same thing by the use of the two words "disability" and "inability."

An express statutory provision on a particular matter would have the effect of overriding any common law rule regarding the same.

Per Woodroffe, J.—Section 15 of the Limitation Act clearly refers to orders of Civil Courts, and not to the condition of things under which an alien enemy is prevented from suing owing to a declaration of war. C DEUTSCHE ASIATISCHE BANK v. HIRA LALL BURDHAN AND SONS, 23 C. W. N. 157 398 ss. 9, 15—"Disability" and "inability", meanings of—Alien enemy, right of, suspension of, whether disability—Applicability of s. 9 to alien enemies prevented from suing—S. 15, interpretation of—Royal proclamation, effect of.

Section 9 of the Limitation Act applies to, and makes no exception in favour of, alien enemies who are prevented from suing in consequence of a declaration of war.

The suspension of an alien enemy's right to sue is a "disability" within the meaning of the section.

The word "disability" in section 9 of the Limitation Act means want of legal ability. It is different from "inability" to sue.

The Official Liquidator of a Bank cannot be looked upon as an agent of the Bank. He is an officer of the Crown whose rights depend upon the terms of his appointment.

The Bengal Tenancy Act is a Local Act to which the saving clause in section 29 (b) of the Limitation Act applies.

Where a mortgage-deed provided for payment of the mortgage money by certain definite instalments and further stipulated that if the instalments were not paid at the appointed time and if any default were to take place then the contract relating to the payment of future instalments was to be deemed rescinded and the mortgagees were to be entitled to bring their suit at once and claim interest at a certain rate:

Held; (1) that a suit brought by the mortgagees on the basis of the above mortgage-deed more than 12 years after the date when the first default in payment was made was time-barred under Article 132 of Schedule I of the Limitation Act;

(2) that no question of waiver on the part of the mortgagees could arise for consideration in connection with a mortgage bond, the enforcement of which was being sought by a sale of the property.

The word "debtor", as used in section 20 of the Limitation Act, means the person who is liable under the contract of debt. Hence, where a father and his son form together a joint Hindu family and a debt is contracted by the father, the son is in the lifetime of the father neither a debtor nor, in the absence of any evidence, an agent of the father for the purposes of the said section. O LACHHMI NARAIN v. A Hindu reversioner impeaching an alienation by a widow need not prove an actual transfer by the widow. It is enough if he proves that the widow had done an act which resulted in the transfer of the property.

Limitation Act—1908—contd.

The withdrawal by the widow of her defence to an action on a mortgage executed by her husband would not be tantamount to an alienation by her, and if a decree is passed in the suit and the mortgaged property is sold, the Court-sale cannot be treated as a private sale by the widow, unless it is shown that it was the necessary result of some collusive arrangement made by her to use the Court as a medium of transfer, i. e., that she intended to transfer the property by means of a Court-sale and took steps to bring it about.

A suit by the reversioner to set aside such a sale is governed by Article 120 and not by Article 125 of the Limitation Act.

One K. executed a mortgage in favour of R. R. in 1883. In a suit by K.'s widow the mortgage was recognised as valid and in another suit by a subsequent mortgagee it was held to be valid against the widow. In execution of a decree against R. R., his mortgagee interest was sold and purchased by R. A. R. A. brought a suit on the mortgage. The widow at first contested the suit but afterwards abandoned her defence. A decree was passed and the property was sold in Court auction and was purchased by 2nd defendant. In a suit by the plaintiff, the nearest reversioner to K., to set aside the sale, impleading the widow as 1st defendant:

Held, (1) that the suit was not maintainable, as under the circumstances the Court-sale could not be treated as an alienation by the widow;

(2) that as the suit was brought more than 6 years from the date of the sale, it was barred under Article 120 of the Limitation Act. M RANGA ROW v. RANGAYAKI AMMAL, 35 M. L. J. 364; 8 L. W. 455; (1918) M. W. N 739

Hindu widow—Suit to set aside alienation by heir of reversioner—Limitation applicable.

A Hindu died leaving two widows K. and R. and two daughters S. and T. In March 1897 K. sold the property in suit to the defendant. K. died in July 1902 and R. died on the 17th January 1903. On the death of R., S. and T. took severally an estate absolute. S. died in 1907, leaving the present plaintiff, her son. T. died in 1911. On the 13th January 1915, the plaintiff brought a suit to recover possession of the property:

Held, (1) that the suit was governed by Article 144 and not by Article 141 of the Limitation Act, inasmuch as the plaintiff claimed as the heir of S. who was an absolute owner;

(2) that the reversioners not being entitled to immediate possession during the lifetime of K. and R., the defendant's possession did not become adverse as against the plaintiff till the death of R. and that, therefore, the suit was within time. B MALKARJUN MAHADEV BELURE v. Where a certain power is given to the Collector by Statute, it is not open to the authority having only general powers of revision over him, to direct him to pass a special order contrary to what he has already done.

Where a revenue sale is confirmed by the Deputy Collector and approved by the District Collector under section 3 of Madras Regulation VII of 1828, the order becomes final under section 38 (3) of the Madras Revenue Recovery Act.

The Board of Revenue has no jurisdiction to interfere with such order and direct the Collector to cancel the sale.

Where, therefore, a Collector, under the Board's directions, in supersession of his order approving of a sale, cancelled it and the purchaser brought a suit for setting aside the order of cancellation and for possession:

Held, (1) that the action of the Board of Revenue was wholly without jurisdiction;

(2) that the suit was not governed by the limitation period prescribed in section 59 of the Madras Revenue Recovery Act as the order cancelling the sale was only a review of the previous order confirming the sale.

The proviso to section 38 of the Madras Revenue Recovery Act does not give power to set aside a sale after it has been confirmed under the first part of the section. M SUNDARAM AYYANGAR v. RAMASWAMI AYYANGAR, 35 M. L. J. 177; 8 L. W. 289; 24 M. L. T. 207; 41 M. 955

Madras Revenue Recovery Act—concl'd.

Act XIX of 1883. Such a sale is free from prior incumbrances.

The fact that the first instalment of a loan taken under Act XIX of 1883 was applied towards meeting the expenses of agricultural improvements already started on the land or that an extension of time was granted by the Government to the borrower, does not make it the less a loan taken for making an improvement within the meaning of the Act.

Per Seshagiri Aiyar, J.—The language of section 7 (c) of Act XIX of 1883 amounts to a declaration that the land is charged with the payment of the revenue.

The effect of section 42 of Madras Act II of 1864 is not only to discharge pre-existing incumbrances upon the property on which the arrear is due, but also pre-existing incumbrances upon every property which is brought to sale for arrears of revenue due from the defaulter.

The effect of section 7 (1) (c) of Act XIX of 1883 is to make a declaration on behalf of the Government that it has a first charge on the property for the loan advanced in respect of that property, just as under section 2 of the Madras Revenue Recovery Act the Government has a first charge for arrears of Government revenue. M SANKARAN NAM-BUDRIPAD v. The word "ejectment" in section 3 (2) of the Malabar Compensation for Tenants' Improvements Act includes "redemption" or recovery of possession of the land mortgaged.

The distinction between preliminary and final decrees made in rules 7 and 8 of Order XXXIV, Civil Procedure Code, is unknown to decrees passed under section 6 (1) of the Malabar Compensation for Tenants' Improvements Act. The latter Act provides only for one decree which is a decree in ejectment, though that decree is liable to be revised by orders passed by the executing Court under section 6 (3) of the Act.

An application for enhancement of the value of improvements owing to further improvements effected by the defendant after the date of the decree cannot be treated as an application for a final decree, nor can the order thereon be deemed to be the final decree in the suit. Malabar Law—concl'd.

It is open to the Karnavan of a Malabar Tarwad, who has delegated his duties to another, to resume the management at any time.

If a Karnavan habitually grants improvident leases and thereby renders himself unable to fulfil his obligations towards the other members of the Tarwad, this would be a ground for removing him from Karnavastanam, but a particular lease cannot be declared to be invalid as against the lessee merely because it is not proved to be beneficial to the Tarwad.

The grant of a Melcharth by a Karnavan before the expiry of the previous Kanom does not render it ab initio void, but it will not bind the grantor's successor. M ABDULLA KOYA v. MAVILERI EACHARAN NAIR, 35 M. L. J. 405 945

Though a usage has sprung up among Nattukottai Chetties that, when money is deposited on the maral of a third party, it should not be allowed to be drawn out unless with the consent of the intermediary, the usual remedy by suit is open to the depositor when the maral man declines to give his consent, and the hands of the Court are not tied down by the usage. M CHELLAPPA CHETTY v. and sell the son's estate. The son objected in execution and his objection was allowed. Thereupon the plaintiff brought the present suit seeking a declaration that the son's property could be sold in execution of the decree on the principle of the pious obligation of a son to pay his father's debts:

Held, (1) that the effect of the decree was to dismiss the suit as against the son with costs;

(2) that under section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code the order on the son's objection in execution was final and that the suit was barred under that section. A DATA DIN v. NANKU, 16 A. L. J. 752 364

Subsequently his creditors obtained decrees against him and attached this property and sold it in execution. One of the other heirs of the mortgagor then sued to redeem the property impleading his co-heirs and the auction-purchasers as parties to the suit:

Held, (1) that the transaction between the first defendant and his co-heirs amounted to a joint charge given by the latter to the former on their joint undivided share of the property in respect of the amount of their share in the debt, and that the plaintiff being one of the co-heirs on whose behalf the joint charge was made was entitled to redeem it;

This, however, does not mean that the intention of the Legislature was that this right should never be recognised. In a proper case, therefore, a mortgagee should be allowed the benefit of money laid out by him on lasting improvements, so far as it has enhanced the value of the mortgaged property.

Where the second mortgagee brings the property to sale first, and the purchaser obtains possession, the purchaser under the first mortgagee's decree has no right to turn him out but he can, qua first mortgagee, bring the property to sale in a properly framed suit.

Where the first mortgagee brings the property to sale first, and the purchaser obtains possession, the purchaser under the second mortgagee's decree has no more than the rights of the second mortgagee; he has no right to possession.

A puisne mortgagee may sue for sale without making the prior mortgagee a party to the suit; but where the prior mortgagee is impleaded, the Court should not ordinarily permit a sale subject to the first mortgage. A decree absolute in a mortgage suit made by a Court in the presence of both parties and on proper adjudication cannot be challenged in execution on the ground that the Court ought not to have made the decree absolute inasmuch as the application for it was barred by limitation.

The mere fact of the coming into force of the new Code of Civil Procedure pending a suit on a mortgage does not make the new section 48 applicable to proceedings in execution of the decree in that suit. C SYAM CHAND MAITI v. BAIKUNTHA NATH MANDAL 143

Defendant brought a suit on a mortgage against the plaintiff, who was the purchaser of the equity of redemption of the mortgaged property and had paid off a prior mortgage. The plaintiff set up the prior mortgage as a shield and the preliminary decree recognised his lien. But no mention of his lien was made in the final decree and the property was sold and purchased by the defendant, who took possession of it without discharging the plaintiff's lien. The plaintiff thereupon applied to be put in possession of the property until his lien was discharged. The application was rejected and plaintiff then brought a suit to recover the amount of his lien:

A mortgagee has no right to remain in possession of the mortgaged property after the mortgage money is satisfied from the usufruct, even though the parties may have miscalculated that the liquidation of the mortgage money from the usufruct shall take a longer period and may have said so in the deed.

Where in consequence of an usufructuary mortgagee's failure to pay the money left with him for payment to a prior encumbrancer, the mortgagor has to satisfy the prior encumbrance, the mortgagor is entitled to claim at the time of redemption accounts of the realizations made by the mortgagee in spite of a stipulation to the contrary contained in the mortgage-deed. Such accounts should not be adjusted on the footing of the consideration actually advanced by the mortgagee, but the mortgagor is entitled to a set-off for the amount paid by him in satisfaction of the prior encumbrance.

Where a mortgagee who is bound to pay off a prior incumbrance fails to do so and the mortgagor is compelled to pay it off and then sues the mortgagee for re-imbursement the suit is governed by Article 62 and not by Article 116 of the Limitation Act and limitation would begin to run from the date on which the plaintiff paid off the prior incumbrance. O PRAG v. Muhammadan Law—Guardianship—Mother acting as de facto guardian, powers of—Alienation by mother, validity of.

Under the Muhammadan Law a person who has charge of the person or property of a minor without being his legal guardian, and who may, therefore, be conveniently called a "de facto guardian", has no power to convey to another any right or interest in immoveable property which the transferee can enforce against the infant, nor can such transferee, if let into possession of the property under such unauthorised transfer, resist an action in ejectment on behalf of the infant.

A mother is entitled only to the custody of the person of her minor child, but is not the natural guardian of the minor and has no larger powers to deal with her minor child's property than any outsider or non-relative who happens to have charge of the infant for the time being.

A father alone, or if he be dead, his executor (under the Sunni Law) is the legal guardian of his minor child. If the father dies without appointing an executor (wasī and his father is alive, the guardianship of his minor children devolves on their grandfather, and should he also be dead, and have left an executor, it vests in him. In default of these de jure guardians, the duty of appointing a guardian devolves upon the Judge as representing the Sovereign. But the powers of even the de jure guardians to intermeddle with the property of minors are confined within legal limits. If the mother is the father's executrix or is appointed by the Judge as the guardian of the minors, she has all the powers of a de jure guardian. If there is no legal guardian, the person in charge of a minor, e. g. the mother) has power as de facto guardian to incur debts, or to pledge the minor's goods and chattels, for the minor's imperative necessities, such as food, clothing or nursing, but has no power to deal with the immoveable property. PC IMAMBANDI v. MUTSADDI, 35 M. An adoption under the provisions of section 22 of the Oudh Estates Act is merely a selection which need not be according to the conditions and the restrictions found in the personal law applicable to the person making the adoption.

The succession to a person, obtaining a taluka under the provisions of section 22, clause 4, of the Oudh Estates Act, and dying intestate, goes, in the absence of any male lineal descendant, to the line of the person who affiliated him and treated him in all respects as a son, and not to his natural line.

The Oudh Rent Act, 1868, recognises three classes of persons, and three only, as having an interest in and entitled to hold land for the purposes of the Act in the province of Oudh, viz., "proprietor", "under-proprietor" and "tenant".

The law attaches to the status of under-proprietor certain rights, among them the right to transfer; and while he retains that status he cannot be divested of any of those rights.

Where, therefore, at the time of settlement a landowner applied to be recorded as an under-proprietor, and under pressure from the Settlement Officer consented to be recorded as an under-proprietor without right of transfer:

Limitation for execution of a decree, therefore, continues to run against a decree-holder during the pendency of an insolvency proceeding and he is not entitled to exclude the period during which the insolvency proceeding has been pending from the period allowed for execution of the decree.

A decree-holder arrested his judgment-debtor in execution of his decree. On the 19th August 1911, however, the judgment-debtor was released on the production of an adjudication order made under the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act. No further action was taken by the decree-holder and the execution Provincial Insolvency Act (III of 1907), s. 16—"Pending", meaning of—Leave to commence suit, when to be obtained—Court, inherent authority of, to terminable proceedings in insolvency.

A legal proceeding is said to be "pending," as soon as commenced, and until it is concluded, that is, so long as the Court having original cognizance of it can make an order on the matters in issue, or to be dealt with therein.

A Court has no inherent authority to terminate the proceedings in an insolvency and deny to creditors and debtors, the exercise of rights clearly conferred by Statute.

Insolvency proceedings would be considered as still 'pending' within the meaning of section 16 of the Provincial Insolvency Act where the Receiver has not yet been discharged and the insolvent has not applied for and obtained his discharge.

The 'leave' to commence a suit, referred to in section 16 (2) of the Provincial Insolvency Act should be obtained before the institution of the suit, and cannot be obtained subsequently to its institution. S JIVANJI MAMOOJI v. GHULAM HUSSAIN, 12 S. L. R. 20 771

Provincial Insolvency Act—concl'd.

— ss. 18 (3), 20, 47—Sale by Official Receiver—Purchaser obstructed in taking possession—Enquiry by Insolvency Court—Order directing delivery to purchaser—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, rr. 97, 98—Jurisdiction of Insolvency Court—Suit for declaration of obstructor's title, injunction and possession, maintainability of.

The power conferred by section 18 (3) of the Provincial Insolvency Act is intended to enable the Receiver to obtain control of the insolvent's property and not to provide for the determination of questions of title as between the insolvent and third parties. This provision is not intended to confer jurisdiction over a person against whom the insolvent has merely a right enforceable by suit.

An Insolvency Court has, therefore, no jurisdiction to institute an enquiry under Order XXI, rules 97 and 98, Civil Procedure Code, into an alleged resistance to a purchaser at the Official Receiver's sale taking possession of the property.

Where an order has been passed by the Insolvency Court directing the removal of the obstruction and delivery of possession to the purchaser, the aggrieved party has a right to file a suit for a declaration of his title and for an injunction restraining delivery of the property to the purchaser. It will not be correct to embody a prayer in such a suit for the setting aside of the order of the Insolvency Court, as that is a matter within the jurisdiction of the High Court.

Per Krishnan, J.—Under section 18 (3) of the Provincial Insolvency Act, the Court has power, in a proper proceeding instituted before it by the Receiver, to enquire into and decide on the merits of an adverse claim to possession set up by a third party.

The rules of the Civil Procedure Code can be availed of only where section 47 of the Insolvency Act applies. To apply that section it must be shown that there was some proper proceeding under the Act in the Insolvency Court, for section 47 merely provides for the procedure to be adopted "in regard to proceedings under this Act."

An order passed by an Insolvency Court under Order XXI, rules 97 and 98 without jurisdiction may be set aside by the High Court on appeal, but that does not bar a fresh suit by the aggrieved party. M MADDIPOTI PERAMMA v. Public Gambling Act (III of 1867), as amended by Act I of 1917, ss. 3, 4—Keeping common gambling house—Being found in gaming house—Proof—Presumption.

In order to sustain the conviction of an accused person for keeping a common gambling house it is necessary for the prosecution not only to prove that the accused owned the house, or was the occupier of it, and that instruments of gambling were kept or used in it, but that they were kept or used for the profit of the accused. In the absence of evidence to show that profit or gain was actually made, a conviction cannot be maintained upon mere suspicion.

Where it is not established that a particular house is a common gaming house, the presence of the accused in that house can raise no presumption against them, and even if the house is a common gaming house, no presumption will arise against them unless it can be shown that gambling was going on at the time when they were present. A RAGHUNATH v. In order to obtain a conviction under section 13 of the Public Gambling Act, it must be proved that the accused were found playing for money or other valuable thing with some instrument of gaming (ejusdem generis with cards, dice or counters) used in playing any game not being a game of mere skill.

Recording bets or laying bets about an uncertain event which the recorders and betters cannot prevent or bring about is not playing a game within the meaning of section 13 of the Public Gambling Act.

The question whether the decision in a rent suit can operate as res judicata on matters other than the relationship of landlord and tenant, depends upon what were the issues raised and decided between the parties in the rent suit.

Where in a rent suit, a kabuliyat has been held, on a judicial determination, to be valid and effective as against the tenant and to have been properly executed, a subsequent suit by the tenant for a declaration that the kabuliyat is null and void is barred by the rule of res judicata. C BENI MADHAB CHACKRABUTTY v. On the 22nd March 1909 plaintiffs got a decree for recovery of possession of some immoveable property. In pursuance of that decree they took possession on the 24th September 1910. The defendant appealed against that decree to the High Court and succeeded in getting it reversed on the 4th June 1913. The defendant then took possession of the property on the 4th of December 1913. On the 2nd of June 1916 the defendant applied, under section 144 of the Civil Procedure Code, for restitution of mesne profits in respect of the property for the period during which the plaintiffs were in possession, namely, from the 24th September 1910 till the 4th December 1913:

Held, (1) that the defendant was not debarred from claiming mesne profits by reason of the provisions of Order II, rule 2, of the Civil Procedure Code;

(2) that the right to apply having accrued to the defendant on the date of the High Court's judgment viz., 4th June 1913, the application was within time and the defendant was, therefore, entitled to mesne profits for the whole of the period from 4th September 1910 to 4th December 1913. Pat KRUPASINDHU ROY v. Santhal Parganas Regulation (III of 1872), s. 6—Interest on interest, whether can be allowed—Mortgage suit—Paramount title, whether can be enquired into—Decree, form of—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O XXXIV.

Under Order XXXIV of the Civil Procedure Code a mortgage decree must set fourth the amount due on the latest date of payment. This is the decree which is contemplated by section 6 of the Santhal Parganas Regulation.

Section 6 of the Santhal Parganas Regulation is a bar to a decree for interest upon interest. Interest subsequent to the decree must be limited to interest on the principal advanced and the costs of the suit.

In mortgage suits the paramount title of parties other than the mortgagor or his representative-in-interest cannot be gone into. Pat KESHOBATI KUMARI v. SATYA NIRANJAN CHAKRABERTY, (1918) PAT. 305

In India, apart from Statute, lands held on service tenure are inalienable beyond the lifetime of the holder.

The subsequent enfranchisement of the lands from service will not validate alienations previously made.

Lands originally held on service tenure and which, on that ground, are inalienable, become alienable on the abolition of the services. They become subject to the ordinary laws of descent and disposal as in the case of ordinary property.

Section 8 of Regulation XXV of 1802 recognises and gives effect to the above principle.

The omission to issue or the delay in issuing a sanad under Regulation XXV of 1802 finally settling the peishcush payable by the holder, will not affect the alienability of such lands after the abolition of the services.

The effect of section 5 of the Regulation was to release the lands forthwith from the condition of rendering Police service or at any rate that was the policy of the Government and there is nothing in the Regulation to prevent effect being given to that intention without the grant of a permanent sanad. The prohibition against alienation of the lands on the grounds of public policy definitely ceased after the passing of Madras Act III of 1895 which has repealed Regulation VI of 1831 except to a limited extent.

A mere transfer of a spes successionis in property does not operate on the transferor's interest when he gets possession of the property.

Under section 8 of the Transfer of Property Act only profits accruing after the transfer pass with the land. Profits already accrued due are not a beneficial interest in the land, since the land cannot be transferred with retrospective effect.

A suit, by an assignee of a village share along with the profits accrued due prior to the sale, to recover such profits is not maintainable, inasmuch as it is a suit for the enforcement of a mere right to sue within the meaning of clause (e) of section 6 of the Transfer of Property Act. N *LAKHPAT SAHAI v. — ss. 5, 6, 58.

An assignment of future property is not invalid in India. Section 6 of the Transfer of Property Act does not contain a total prohibition against the assignment of all future property, but must be construed as an exception to the general rule in favour of transfers of property, present and future.

Portions of a section should be construed ejusdem generis with the rest of the section.

The words 'of a like nature' in clause (a) of section 6 indicate that the 'possibility' referred to therein must belong to the same category as the chance of an heir-apparent or the chance of a relation obtaining a legacy.

Under section 58 of the Transfer of Property Act, a property can be specific so long as it is identifiable, though it may not be in existence on the date of the transfer. A transfer, therefore, if otherwise valid, is not rendered inefficacious by reason of the subject-matter not having been in existence on the date of the agreement. M *PUSAPATI VENKATAPATHIRAJU GARU v. Where a mortgagee acquires a portion of the mortgaged property, the right of the owner of the other portion of the property to redeem the whole is not absolute. In such a case the right of redemption depends upon the will of the mortgagee. Where a mortgagee acquires a portion of the mortgaged property, pending a suit for redemption by some of several mortgagors, it cannot be said that by taking such a transfer he affects the rights of the plaintiffs under the decree or order which may be made in the suit. Section 52 of the Transfer of Property Act has, therefore, no application to such a case, and the mortgagee can insist upon his right to confine the plaintiffs to a suit for redemption of their share of the mortgaged property only. O RAMADHIN v. Both the lower Courts, holding that there was no evidence that the plaintiff's father had any debts at the time of the kobala, decreed the suit, although it was proved that the kobala was executed in the very year in which the defendant obtained his decree against the plaintiff's father:

Held, that the decision of the lower Courts could not stand, as neither of them had considered the fact that the kobala was executed at a time when the executant was well aware of the probability of the decree of a substantial sum being passed against him, and also as neither Court in considering the evidence and facts of the case had set clearly before its mind the presumption created by clause (2) of section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act. C MAMRAJ AGARWALA v. Plaintiff executed a usufructuary mortgage of certain sir plots. Plaintiff brought a suit to redeem the usufructuary mortgage executed by him:

Held, that as soon as the plaintiff's proprietary rights were sold he became an ex-proprietary tenant of the sir plots under section 10 of the Agra Tenancy Act, and that as the mortgage stood between him and his right to occupy the land as an ex-proprietary tenant, he was a person who had an interest in the property within the meaning of section 91 of the Transfer of Property Act and was, therefore, entitled to redeem it. A MUHAMMAD HUSSAIN KHAN v. S. 91—Mortgage—Redemption—Interest in mortgaged property, what is—Perpetual lessee, whether can redeem.

The interest which entitles a person to redeem must be derived directly or indirectly from the mortgagor since the making of the mortgage. In other words, a person may redeem only if he is affected by the mortgage; if he is not affected by it, there is no occasion for his redeeming and he cannot be permitted to do so.

A mortgagor in possession may make a lease conformable to usage in the ordinary course of management; but it is not competent to him to grant a lease on unusual terms or to alter the character of the land or to authorise its use in a manner or for a purpose different from the mode in which he himself had used it before he created the mortgage.

The owner of certain malik makbuza plots mortgaged them to the defendant and subsequently granted a perpetual lease thereof to the plaintiff. The defendant obtained a sale decree upon the mortgage, without making the plaintiff a party to the suit, and himself purchased the mortgaged property in the execution sale. The plaintiff thereupon brought a suit to redeem the mortgage:

Held, (1) that the plaintiff's lease was contrary to usage and was, therefore, not binding on the defendant;

(2) that the foreclosure and sale in pursuance of the mortgage prejudiced the plaintiff's interest in the mortgaged property and he was, therefore, entitled to redeem it. N SHANKER SINGH v. HUKUMCHAND, 14 N. L. R. 117 99

Trusts Act (II of 1882), ss. 81, 82—

Property purchased by husband in name of wife—Advancement—Presumption—English Law.

The rule of English Law that when a husband buys property in the name of his wife he should be presumed to have done so for the benefit of the wife, applies to persons of British nationality resident in India, and the mere fact that after the purchase the husband continues to manage the property and collect rents is not sufficient to rebut the presumption. L B KERWICK v. Plaintiff and her sister, who had been brought up in the house of their uncle, the defendant, and were under his influence, executed a sale-deed in his favour for an inadequate consideration. After the death of her sister the plaintiff brought a suit to recover the property conveyed by the sale-deed:

Held, that the defendant stood in a fiduciary position towards the plaintiff and her sister and that, therefore, under section 88 of the Trusts Act, the sale-deed was null and void both as regards the share of the plaintiff and that of her sister. B GOVIND RAMJI GANJALE v. U. P. Court of Wards Act (IV of 1912), s. 54, applicability of—Title of ward defeasible, effect of—Pre-emption, suit for, whether must embrace entire property sold.

The provisions of section 54 of the U. P. Court of Wards Act cover all suits relating to the property of any ward, that is, any property belonging to him, though his title thereto may be defeasible by reason of a claim for pre-emption which may be maintainable in regard to the same.

The rule that a suit for pre-emption must embrace the entire property sold, unless the plaintiff is not entitled to claim pre-emption in regard to any portion thereof, is inapplicable where the interests of the vendees, inter se, are distinct or where they have since been separated or divided.

The defendant Municipality served a notice on the plaintiff, on 17th June 1916, requiring him to remove a platform which projected on to a public road. Plaintiff served a notice of action on the Municipality on 14th July 1916, and on the 4th August instituted a suit against the Municipality for a declaration that the platform was his ancestral property, and that the notice issued by the Municipality for the demolition thereof was invalid, and also prayed for an injunction:

Held, (1) that the suit was in substance one for a declaration of title and was not a suit in which the only relief claimed was an injunction and that, therefore, the exemption contained in clause (4) of section 326 of the U. P. Municipalities Act was not applicable to it;

(2) that the suit having been commenced before the expiry of two months after the service of the notice prescribed by section 326 (1) of the U. P. Municipalities Act was premature and must be dismissed. A MUNICIPAL BOARD OF BENARES v. GAJADHAR, 16 A. L. J. 793 848

One A., a Hindu, left a Will appointing his brother's son as his vars "to conduct charities Tiruvethanthal, Tirukkadalimalai and Tirupathi with the help of my properties." The mode of conducting the charity was specified to be the giving of thaligais in the temples on the Tirunakshatram day, but no special allotments were made for the purpose. At the registration of the Will in his house the testator declared before the Registrar that he intended by the Will to bequeath properties to charities. It also transpired that, in a suit against the testator for a declaration that part of the properties in dispute and some other properties did not belong to him solely, the testator had filed a written statement stating that he acquired the properties for charity and intended to make a testamentary disposition in that behalf. In a suit instituted under section 92, Civil Procedure Code, for removal of the 1st defendant, the vars aforesaid, from trusteeship and for a scheme for the management of the trust:

Held, (1) that the dedication was definite and not void for vagueness or uncertainty.

(2) that the mention of the word 'vars' in the Will did not make the 1st defendant the sole owner of the properties subject to the carrying out of the directions relating to charity, but only constituted him trustee for the charities;

(3) that the direction as to the performance of thaligai was not meant to be exhaustive but only illustrative and that it was competent to the Court, after the allotment of a particular fund for the thaligai, to direct the rest of the income to be devoted for imparting religious instruction;

(4) that statements made by the testator at the registration of the Will and in judicial proceedings relating to the properties comprised in the bequest were admissible under sections 6 and 32 of the Evidence Act;

(5) that the trust was a public and not a private trust.

Per Abdur Rahim, J.—The rule as to cy pres is quite in harmony with the teachings of Hindu Sastras and has been applied in many cases relating to charitable gifts by Hindus.

corpus of the fund, is to find out whether there was a general testamentary intention or purpose. Even though the object may be specified and the bequest otherwise definite, if the law will not allow the application of the fund for the purpose, it may be that the Courts are not at liberty to infer a general testamentary intention in favour of charity in general and to direct the application of the property to other purposes of a charitable kind.

The primary rule is to ascertain whether the object aimed at by the testator could be carried out without making a new Will for him. Although there may be vagueness in the selection of the places or in the allocation of the funds, so long as it is ascertainable that the testator had a particular object in view and that he intended that the funds left by him should be appropriated to that object, Courts are bound to see that the persons appointed by the testator do not misappropriate the funds.

If the Court can ascertain that there was a general charitable intention, the fact that the particular object for which the charity was intended did not exist or that the fund intended for that charity could not exhaust the whole income, will not be any reason for holding that the bequest failed in whole or in part. If it appears that the donor intended that, in any event, the fund should be devoted to charity and that a particular institution was named merely as the channel by which that intention was to be effected, the whole fund will be regarded as having been dedicated to charity and the Court will proceed to carry out the intention of the testator on the principle of cy pres.

The rule of English Law that even answers to interrogatories may be regarded either as a codicil or a Will may not apply to testamentary dispositions in India. Under the Hindu Wills Act and the Indian Succession Act it is doubtful whether such informal declarations could be regarded as testamentary.

There is nothing in the religion of the Hindus in their traditions and in the consciousness of the people, which will compel Courts to respect prejudices which sap at the root of religion and which pervert and not advance its precepts. Therefore, whenever grants made to religious institutions are not ear-marked or, if ear-marked, are not intended to exhaust the recurring income, and whenever they are made as a general thanksoffering, it is proper and legitimate to direct their application to the promotion of knowledge.

Indian Courts have ample powers to give directions towards the application of the trust income, even though the trustee may not himself be competent similarly to apply it. The doctrine of cy pres should receive as extended an application as possible so as to give effect to the true intent and aim of the donor. His lapses, his ignorance and his failure to understand the situation should not fetter the Courts so long as the purposes specified by him are not violated. M MUTHUKRISHNA NAICKEN v. RAMA CHANDRA NAICKEN 611

—, construction of—Gift by implication—English rules, applicability of, to Hindu Wills—Bequest by Hindu to his daughter—Absolute estate, grant of, presumption as to—Devise to two daughters, one with and the other without offspring—Direction that offspring to be born to daughter having no issue should take like offspring of other daughter—Express words of gift to latter, absence of, effect of.

The general principles of construction governing English Wills are applicable also to Hindu Wills, e.g., where there are no express words of gift but the gift can be implied from the language used in the Will, the Courts should have regard to the dominating intention of the testator and effectuate that intention by ascertaining it from the entire scheme of the Will.

There is no positive presumption of Hindu Law that a gift by a person to his daughter is of an absolute estate.

A Hindu testator devised his property to his two daughters, S. and A. A. had issue at the time of the death of the testator while S. had none. The Will recited that as A. was attending to the testator's comforts and had male offspring who would perform karmams (ceremonies after death) to him, he gave her two out of three shares and he gave S. who had no issue, the remaining one share. The Will further recited that any person adopted by S., should not get her share, but that if any male child was born to her he should, like the children of A., enjoy his mother's share from generation to generation:

Held, that there was no gift of an absolute estate to A. and that though there were no express words of gift to her children, they took the reversion after A.'s death. M KOMANDAR SRINIVASA SESHACHALU v. KOMANDUR SESHAMMA, 34 M. L. J. 479 758 — Execution, proof of—Disposing mind of testatrix—Evidence in support of Will.

In an application for Letters of Administration with the Will annexed, it was not denied by the caveators that the testatrix had a disposing mind on the date on which the Will was alleged to have been executed. Expert evidence proved decisively that the impression on the Will was the thumb-mark of the testatrix, but it was contended that though a Will was, in fact, executed, it was lost and that the Will propounded was a forgery, having been written to the thumb-impression which already existed on a piece of paper in possession of the applicant's husband, who held a general power-of-attorney from the testatrix. The Will was supported by the scribe and the three attesting witnesses. The applicant herself testified that she had seen the Will written, that it had been made over to her by the testatrix and that she had kept it with herself:

Held, (1) that it was not proved that the original Will was lost and that the theory of a dishonest conspiracy to forge a Will could not be sustained in view of the positive evidence produced in support of the Will;

(2) that the Will was a genuine document duly executed by the testatrix. P BHAGIRTHI v. GHISA SINGH 174

— Execution, proof of—Presumption—Sound disposing mind, what is—Burden of proof.

A plaintiff who sets up a title under a Will must satisfy the Court that the Will was "duly executed", that is to say, he must furnish proof of execution which carries with it a conviction that the testator knew and approved of the contents of the instrument. This involves the proposition that he was a free and capable testator. The ordinary rule is that the execution of a Will by a competent testator raises a presumption that he knew and approved of the contents of the Will; and ordinarily the competency of the testator is presumed, if nothing appears to rebut the ordinary presumption. But where the mental capacity of the testator is challenged by evidence, it is the duty of the Court to find whether upon the evidence it is established that the testator was of sound disposing mind and did know and approve of the contents of the Will. In order to constitute what is known in law as "a sound disposing mind," it must be shown that the testator was able to understand his position, able to appreciate his property and able to form a judgment with respect to the parties whom he chose to benefit.

A Will duly executed is not to be treated as revoked, either wholly or partially, by a Will which is not forthcoming, unless it is proved by clear and satisfactory evidence that the later Will contained either words of revocation, or dispositions so inconsistent with the dispositions of the earlier Will that the two cannot stand together. It is not enough to show that the Will which is not forthcoming differed from the earlier Will, if it cannot be shown in what the difference consisted.

estate in the taluka and a power to adopt a son, and further stipulated that the adopted son would after her death succeed as full proprietor in the manner contemplated by section 22, clause 8, of the Oudh Estates Act, and the second wife then adopted a son:

Held, (1) that "clause 8" in the Will was merely a clerical error for "clause 9";

(2) that the adoption was valid, inasmuch as the talukdar could give to his second wife the power to adopt a son irrespective of the Will and as the intentions of the talukdar under the Will were substantially carried out, for the estate taken by the adopted son retained the characteristics of a taluka.

A Will duly executed cannot be treated as revoked, either wholly or in part, by a Will which is not forthcoming, and the contents of which cannot be definitely ascertained. It is not enough to show that the Will which is not forthcoming differs from the earlier one, if it cannot be shown in what the difference consists. ○ LAL TRIBHAWAN NATH SINGH v.
